

Wildest Land Claims Plane

RIO DE JANEIRO (UPI)—A Brazilian aircraft and the 20 men aboard, who took off Friday to rescue men at a jungle airstrip from giant Stone Age Indians, were reported lost Saturday in "the wildest stretch of land in the world."

"I'm afraid they are lost," said a Brazilian air force officer of a military transport that went down in a tropical rain forest that is the world's largest unexplored territory except for the frigid zones.

The air force transport, carrying 14 soldiers and six crewmen, was one of two sent to Cachimbo air base, midway between the Xingu River and the Carajás Mountains and about 1,000 miles south of the Amazon.

Cachimbo had reported an attack by Menkrony Indians, some seven feet tall and all armed with clubs, spears and arrows. The other plane arrived safely and drove off the Indians by buzzing the airstrip several times.

The missing transport's last message was: "We are trying to land. We are not in condition..."

Crash, Fire Kill 34

SAIGON (UPI)—A four-engine U.S. military transport plane carrying servicemen back from vacation to the Vietnam warfront crashed Saturday night at the An Khe air base in the south-central highlands.

Officials said 34 died among the 55 people aboard—48 passengers and seven crewmen—and many of the 21 survivors pulled from the wreckage were injured critically.

The pilot apparently tried to check the takeoff but the plane ran off the runway, tipped nose forward and exploded in flames.

'No Comment' In Moscow

MOSCOW (UPI)—Moscow radio and the official news agency Tass reported without comment Saturday night the explosion of China's first hydrogen bomb.

Sails Fill Docks

Six thousand Victorians jammed Ogden Point docks Saturday to inspect majestic Japanese barques Kaito Maru, above, and Nippon Maru—and more are expected during final viewing hours today, from 2 to 5 p.m. and 8 to 9 p.m. Other events today, at Royal Athletic Park, are band concert and judo, karate and karate displays at 1 p.m., baseball game an hour later. Ships leave Tuesday. — (Jim Ryan)

Flier, Daughter Safe in North

ATLIN LAKE (UPI)—The assistant commissioner of the Alaska education department and his daughter, whose plane crashed Wednesday, were spotted Saturday walking out of the rugged northern B.C. wilderness.

An RCMP rescue team from Atlin Lake was sent to bring in Robert Thomas, 43, and his daughter Nancy, 9, who were only seven miles away. The two appeared to be in good condition.

They vanished during a 25-mile flight from Watson Lake, Y.T., to Juneau, Alaska. A U.S. search aircraft spotted their plane Saturday and a Canadian aircraft found the Watsons soon after.

One of the great—and often controversial—historians of our day, Dr. Arnold Toynbee today starts on Page 4 a four-part series on the Arab-Israeli war.

Dr. Toynbee, world famous for his 12-volume A Study of Human History, expresses his views on the dispute, the reasons for the war and what he thinks Israel and the Arab nations—and the Great Powers—must now do to bring about a reconciliation and permanent peace.

Still No Threat, U.S. Insists

Chinese H-Bomb 'Cuts' Monopoly

TOKYO (AP)—Red Chinese Premier Chou En-lai, formally announcing his country's first hydrogen bomb, said Saturday night the chief significance of the event is that China has broken a "U.S.-Soviet nuclear monopoly."

In Washington, spokesmen for U.S. Defence Secretary McNamara said the bomb failed to alter the official belief that China won't have the capacity to deal the U.S. a punishing blow for about eight years.

The spokesmen said China's sixth announced nuclear explosion did not change McNamara's position that it's unlikely China can deploy a significant number of operational ICBMs before the mid-1970s, that number being about 75 missiles.

The Chinese, calling the bomb a telling blow at the "nuclear blackmail" policy of Russia and the U.S., indicated the test occurred at or near Lop Nor, the atomic research centre in remote Sinkiang province.

In a broadcast monitored in Tokyo, Radio Peking said Chou called the Chinese hydrogen bomb "the common victory of the world's revolutionary people."

"The most important significance of the success of China's nuclear tests lay in the fact that they had broken the U.S.-Soviet nuclear monopoly," he said.

The Chinese premier said, "China conducted nuclear tests finally to eliminate nuclear weapons. At no time and under no circumstances, would China be the first to use nuclear weapons."

SIXTH TEST

The test was the sixth in an atomic series launched Oct. 16, 1954, with the explosion of a device that Western experts said had the force of 20,000 tons of TNT, about the power of the bomb a U.S. plane dropped over Hiroshima, Japan, Aug. 6, 1945.

The most powerful of the previous explosions—rated at the equivalent of 300,000 tons or more of TNT—was the fifth, Dec. 23, 1956.

The hydrogen bomb announcement created no great surprise in Tokyo, which is especially sensitive to nuclear weapons development around the world, or in Washington, which is trying to limit the spread of such weapons.

NO EFFECT YET

A Japanese government source said explosion of the bomb "would not affect the nuclear balance between East and West." He added, however, that it could be broken when China completes development of nuclear weapons to be used with long-range missiles.

American officials, closely following China's five previous tests, had concluded the Chinese were moving toward the hydrogen bomb development.

The Atomic Energy Commission in Washington began fresh atmospheric checks through its worldwide monitoring system to determine the nature and size of the device.

NO QUESTION

"We have no reason to question that Peking has exploded its first hydrogen bomb," a commission spokesman said.

At the United Nations, Secretary-General U Thant said "any explosion of an atomic or a hydrogen bomb by any country anywhere is to be regretted in the context of the General Assembly resolutions on the matter." These resolutions oppose such tests.

The hydrogen bomb test, the New China News Agency said in an English-language dispatch monitored in Tokyo, "marks the entry of the development of China's nuclear weapons into an entirely new stage."

'IN TEN YEARS'

The agency said Communist party Chairman Mao Tse-tung expressed belief in June, 1958, that it would be entirely possible for China to "make some atomic bombs and hydrogen bombs in 10 years' time."

"We solemnly declare to the people of China and the whole world that this prediction of Chairman Mao has now been realized while our proletarian cultural revolution is winning resolute victory," it said.

In crediting the success to Mao's thought, the Chinese said the latest explosion "is a very great encouragement and support to the Vietnamese people in

Crash Kills American

A 24-year-old American died in St. Joseph's Hospital Saturday afternoon from injuries suffered when a car in which he was travelling smashed into a rock outcrop beside the Trans-Canada Highway near Belgrave Road at about 4:30 a.m.

The victim was David Fred Arrellanes of Norwalk, Calif. Christopher Windle, 21, and Hubertus Ris, 18, both of Ladysmith, are in fair condition—Windle with shoulder and chest injuries and Ris with chest, jaw and leg injuries. Sanich police do not know yet who drove the late model car which clipped an oncoming sports car before slamming into the outcrop.

Strips of metal were flung around the area by the force of the collision and the car's motor was ripped out. The car ended back on the high-

Sports car driver John Cliff, 24, of 1327 Clover, was not injured and retained control of his car.

Coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre said he will set a date Monday for an inquest. Sanich police have asked anyone who witnessed the crash to call 383-4321.

Non-Aligned Nations Say So

From AP, Reuters, UPI

Israel's chances of being termed an aggressor by the UN General Assembly session that opened Saturday morning increased at night when 47 non-aligned nations took such action at a private meeting.

Informants said the 47 condemned Israel's aggression and asked the immediate and unconditional withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied territory—the Soviet demand defeated in the Security Council and expected in the assembly.

The 47 delegates elected Yugoslav ambassador Danilo Lelic to chair a seven-country steering committee which would sound out other groups on possible joint action. Many of the 47 nations were said to be from Latin America.

SPOTLIGHT STOLEN

Their action took some of the spotlight from the surprise visit of Soviet Premier Kosygin to the assembly.

It also removed a bit of the spotlight from U.S. President Johnson's plan to make a radio-TV speech Monday morning containing a major Mideast policy statement. The speech will come an hour before the session reconvenes.

Johnson, announcing the speech, also declined comment on when and where he'll meet Kosygin.

In the assembly, Kosygin's first North American visit, will heard U.S. ambassador Arthur Goldberg pledge U.S. cooperation if the Soviet premier came with the "sole aim" of achieving Mideast peace.

Kosygin, who reached New York at 5 a.m. Saturday on his first North American visit, will be Monday's second speaker, after Goldberg. Egypt will be third, Israel fourth.

People who remember the flamboyant, colorful behavior of Nikita Khrushchev during the last visit of a Soviet premier to the UN, in 1960, found Kosygin a rather sombre figure, interesting chiefly because of the power he represents.

EXPRESSIONLESS

He sat expressionless throughout the 42-minute Saturday morning assembly meeting, at which the assembly president, Abdul Rahman Pazhwak of Afghanistan, asked the momentum towards an era of peace and relaxed relations among the major powers of the world "now is in danger of being reduced to a snail's pace."

Pazhwak expressed the hope that national leaders coming to the assembly session "may not confine their deliberations to the public discussion of international problems, but may avail themselves of the unique opportunity to seek out all possibilities of consulting on the various aspects and problems of peace."

But Pazhwak also said that, in his view, the Middle East conflict is a matter "solely for the United Nations to solve."

PRIVATE TALKS

Wearing a dark blue business suit and riding in a black limousine, Kosygin arrived at the UN at 9:20 a.m., flanked by Foreign Minister Gromyko and Ambassador Nikolai Fedorenko. He had a private, 22-minute meeting with Secretary-General U Thant, who met him at the head of the staircase just inside the assembly building, and then called on Pazhwak for 10 minutes.

He entered the blue-and-gold assembly hall at 10:07 a.m., walking straight to the Soviet delegation's desks without stopping to greet anybody, and the session opened three minutes later. Directly behind the Soviet party sat the Albanian delegation, regarded as Communist China's UN spokesman and represented on this occasion only by its two most junior members.

Kosygin made his exit more

Even Kosygin Laughed

UNITED NATIONS (UPI)—Saudi Arabia's ambassador Jamil Baroodi, the resident philosopher of the UN, switched tactics in the General Assembly Saturday and left 'em laughing instead—even Soviet Premier Kosygin. Last weekend, Baroodi attracted wide attention with an emotional but ineffective attack in the Security Council on the U.S. love of "mammon," including Kennedy and Rockefeller money.

This time, he began with a statement that "some believe, whom I don't want to name, that aggression by the Zionists" is like throwing rose petals to the Arab world—and threw imaginary rose petals to the already-snickering delegates.

Assembly president Abdul Rahman Pazhwak of Afghanistan cut short Baroodi's speech, reminding him all matters of "content" had been adjourned to Monday.

Baroodi folded his speech, waved a finger and said: "If the distinguished Mr. President had waited but 30 seconds more, I would have been through."

He then walked slowly and regally from the dais to his seat.

During the head-high walk, the stone face of Kosygin began to break, until he was finally trying unsuccessfully to hide his laughter behind his hand.

Skipper's Mailbag Full of Thanks

MAIL CALL: Skipper of HMCS Saskatchewan, Cmdr. Peter Trivette, got a very large envelope full of letters recently that are probably the best measure of the public relations value of foreign visits.

Early this year, while on a three-month training exercise in the Caribbean, the destroyer escort visited St. Michael, Barbados. While there the ship invited students of a local school to visit the ship.

The letters were from those students, and judging by their contents, the children had a memorable day.

"What I liked best of all were the compass, the singing and the operating room," remarked one young lady. (It is assumed she meant she enjoyed her tour through the ship's operations room.)

Almost all of them expressed the hope the Saskatchewan would pay a return visit in the near future.

Most of the students expressed delight at the "eatables" which were provided aboard the ship. On such children's party occasions, cooks of the visiting ships always provide them with hot dogs, ice cream, cake and cookies. Many of the children took some of the "goodies" home with them.

"While on our way out," wrote one student, "a policeman stopped us and asked what was in our bags. We showed him and then he let us go. We were happy again."

MAN WANTED: When all the centennial fuss is over and Expo is a thing of yesterday it might be an idea to give a thought to one of the better things that has come out of the mish mash.

This area needs an entertainment director. A person who can act for all municipalities in co-ordinating events.

The Victoria Day parade, Bannockburn Day, the Saskatchewan Fair and what have you, would all benefit from professional direction.

It would be a pity if just because 1967 goes out of style that there is no more public entertainment. We have band contests, art shows and a host of attractions that have been sponsored or encouraged by the centennial society. Why quit now?

One man and a secretary could do wonders for entertainment. Centennial committee chairman Art Mebs is in full agreement and says he would be delighted to see Equi-mat participate in such a project.

MEERMAID POACHERS: John Tisdale, MLA for Saanich and the Islands, is quite upset by Charles White's suggestion that Judy the Mermaid take up residence at the Undersea Gardens.

The MLA phoned the gardens to say he was distressed that one of his constituents should be asked to move into Grit territory.

So far there has been no comment from Liberal member Alan Macfarlane. The mermaid has also declined to comment or make an appearance.

FREE READING: The provincial department of agriculture has put out an excellent free booklet titled the Home Vegetable Garden. All that is necessary if you want one is to write for it.

It is written by Alan Little, the Victoria home-extensionist and contains, in addition to text, a series of simple sketches on how to make things for the garden.

The department has also published an interesting booklet on bovine mastitis but probably not too many readers are suffering from that scourge.

GALLERY NOTE: The Art Gallery of Greater Victoria will display 174 craft works starting Wednesday. The show arranged by Norah McQuillan of the National Gallery will include works by such local artists as Leonard and Mary Osborne, Jan and Helge Grove, Margaret Neill-McLennan, Jean Anderson, G. K. Gonnason, Katherine Porter and K. E. Glyde.

This craft show will be on display until July 9.

Kidney Registry in Boston

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: Our 27-year-old son is being kept alive by dialysis while we search for a kidney donor. One of our biggest problems is overcoming the fear in people that if they give up one kidney to save a life, they will become invalids. What are the facts?

The immediate family have been ruled out as donors because of differences in blood type. Do you have any suggestions where we might turn to get a donor? — J.L.

I don't know how much help I can offer, if any, aside from calling attention to this problem. It is a fairly new one, but it is only recently that enough has been learned to make such transplantations possible other than from one twin to another.

There is a truth that sacrificing one kidney will cause the donor to become an invalid — or, indeed, cause any change in his life and activities. People get along very well with only one kidney.

There is, of course, the potential risk that if anything happens to the one remaining kidney, there is no second kidney to rely on. We cannot honestly blink at that fact. But invalidism from giving a kidney? No.

One solution which already has received considerable medical attention is the use of a kidney of another patient who has just died — someone injured in an automobile accident, for example.

The problem was discussed not long ago at a conference at Duke University Medical Centre, one of the suggestions being legislation to make it simpler for a patient to leave his kidneys or other organs for such transplants in event of his death. In Boston, and perhaps elsewhere, there is a "kidney registry" which is a step in the same general direction — to know where needed organs may become available.

Dear Dr. Molner: We have recently been told that eating yogurt would improve our physical well-being. We are in our middle 40s. What are the advantages of using it regularly? — A.M.C.

Yogurt is a good food for those who like it. It is a form of fermented milk made by the addition of lactic acid bacilli to whole or skimmed milk. This imparts a certain flavor not present in ordinary milk. Some find it more palatable than whole milk. It has no magic properties. It can be used regularly if you like it.

DEADLOCK CLAIM

The Soviet Union requested the assembly session, in a letter to Thant from Gromyko, on the basis of Article 11 of the UN Charter, which says that any country can refer a peace-threatening issue to the assembly so long as the Security Council is not actually dealing with it. The Soviet Union contended that the council is deadlocked.

The letter made it clear that, to the Russians, the issue is "Israeli aggression" and the assembly is meeting to "liquidate" the consequences of this aggression by condemning Israel and recommending the withdrawal of Israel forces from occupied Arab territory. Any such recommendation would have to be referred to the council for action.

Outside the UN, British Prime Minister Wilson will fly to Paris today to discuss the Middle East crisis with President de Gaulle. The talk might overcome the reluctance of both to attend the assembly session.

MARTIN IN FRANCE

Before going to the UN, British Foreign Secretary Brown urged a meeting of U.S., British, French and Soviet UN representatives to discuss a permanent Middle East settlement in Paris, Canada's External Affairs Minister Martin met French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville to hear the French position, then flew home.

Algeria's Supreme Islamic Council, paying tribute to Pope Paul's efforts for peace, asked him to take a stand in the dispute.

11,000 RESCUED

The mammoth campaign to save civilian and military stragglers in the Sinai Desert continued, with the Red Cross in Geneva announcing Israeli forces have returned nearly 11,000 Egyptian prisoners to Egypt so far.

Britain granted $1,500,000 for reconstruction and rehabilitation projects in Jordan.

Clearance of the Suez Canal moved a bit closer as Egypt agreed to evacuation of crewmen from 15 ships stranded in the area.

Egypt also agreed to the return of U.S. oil workers to drilling sites in various parts of the country. The workers had stayed in Cairo hotels during the fighting.

Egypt's severe troop losses had their effect on the war of President Nasser in Yemen. Aden dispatches said 1,500 troops and more than 150 tanks have been returned to Egypt from Yemen.

Reports from newspapers in Tel Aviv and St. Louis, Mo., claimed the Egyptians stockpiled large quantities of deadly nerve gas in the Sinai Peninsula before the war.

The gas was contained in artillery shells ready for firing but, said the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, "why it was not used against the Israeli forces has not been learned."

their war against the United States and to the Arab people in their resistance to aggression by the U.S. and British imperialists and their tool, Israel."

'WON'T BE FIRST'

Peking reiterated that its development and testing "are entirely for the purpose of defence, with the ultimate aim of abolishing nuclear weapons."

"We solemnly declare once again that at no time and in no circumstances will China be the first to use nuclear weapons," the broadcast said.

Washington officials noted the important thing is to be able to deliver an atomic or hydrogen weapon, and the only capability the Chinese have now is a small force of obsolescent, limited-range bombers.

PRESSURE SURE

Despite this apparent Pentagon confidence in its estimate of the danger to the United States, the new Chinese test is certain to bring new pressure from Congress and probably the military chiefs for a start on an anti-missile system.

McNamara has contended that there is plenty of time before Red China's atomic missile power becomes dangerous enough to install a defence.

Some experts have estimated it would take about four years to deploy an anti-missile system, even the elemental one that would be effective against a relatively primitive Chinese attack.

DEFENCE COSTLY

McNamara has estimated a "thin" anti-missile defence against a Chinese threat through the 1970s might cost about $3,500,000,000.

The United States has spent well over $2,000,000,000 in experimentation and development work on an anti-missile system. China tested a nuclear armed missile over about 400 miles last October, indicating progress in developing at least a medium-range delivery system.

British Businessman Admits He Was Spy

LONDON (Reuters) — British businessman Greville Wynne, admitted on television to do espionage work, released in exchange for Russia a spy.

He said his business connections in Eastern Europe were to do espionage work. He said his wife did not know.

He was a spy until he returned to London after his release. Wynne said he had British intelligence training during the war and went back to it after a period as a businessman.

He was interviewed on a BBC news program about the forthcoming publication of his book in which he describes his dealings with Oleg Penkovsky, a Soviet intelligence colonel sentenced to death for spying for the West.

Wynne said the only espionage payment he received was for incidental expenses. He had not been forced into it, he added, and had many chances to withdraw.

Wynne was arrested in Budapest in 1952 and flown to Moscow. Six months later he and Penkovsky were tried together.

Penkovsky was shot and Wynne sentenced to eight years in prison. In April, 1964, Wynne was released in exchange for Lomsdale, a Soviet spy held in Britain.

Wynne said Penkovsky, his Soviet contact, had prevented a nuclear war.

CHANGED HISTORY
"All has not been told of this story. I don't know if in my lifetime it ever will be told. It has certainly changed history."

Wynne, who frequently travelled to Moscow on business, acted as a courier between Penkovsky, London and Washington.

Israeli Experts Hired

SINGAPORE (UPI) — Defence Minister Goh Keng Swee Saturday announced Singapore has enlisted the aid of Israeli military advisers to train its armed forces.

The presence of Israeli experts had been rumored for some time. But the fact did not officially become known until Saturday when an unidentified Israeli colonel stood on the reviewing stand at a parade with Goh.

The minister thanked the advisers for "their contribution in the planning and preparation of the (military) training program."

Informal sources said, the Israelis were brought in late last year about the same time Singapore decided to bolster its defenses by making military

Anguilla to 'Go It Alone'

SAN JUAN, P.R. (UPI) — The leader of tiny Anguilla's independence fight vowed Saturday his Caribbean island would shrug off refusal by Britain and America to accept it as a territory and "go it alone."

Peter Adams, 36, the spokesman for the 35-square-mile West Indian island's 6,000 inhabitants, flew home after warning "We will defend our island" if the St. Kitts federation from which it bolted tried to take it back.

NO CONVENIENCES
Because Anguilla has no electricity, telephones, running water or a radio link with the outside world, Adams had to fly to San Juan May 30 to declare independence.

He cabled President Johnson Thursday for permission to associate with the U.S. as a territory similar to the Virgin Islands. There was no reply. An unidentified state department official in Washington commented Anguilla would have to deal through Britain.

HOME RULE
The coral-studded island at the northern tip of the West Indies chain was a British colonial possession from the 17th century until last February.

Britain granted home rule to the St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla federation Feb. 7 but kept control of the three islands' foreign affairs and defense. Anguilla seceded after charging the federation's central government, dominated by the larger St. Kitts, was completely neglecting it.

Prestige-Seekers Killed By Ambushed Battalion

SAIGON (AP) — Viet Cong troops, seeking a prestige-building annihilation of a sizeable American unit, were mauled Saturday when they ambushed a U.S. infantry battalion in War Zone D.

A spokesman for the U.S. 1st Infantry Division said 31 Americans and "by initial body count," 196 of the enemy were killed in a three-hour battle at a jungle clearing 50 miles north of Saigon.

Of the 600 or so Americans involved, 113 were wounded. There was no estimate of the wounded among the Viet Cong, who fled under pounding from U.S. jet planes and artillery.

U.S. bombers ranged deep into North Vietnam on Saturday to attack eight railroad yards and sidings, most of them north of Hanoi. Pilots reported they destroyed or damaged 68 box-cars.

BASE BATTERED
Among major strikes was a raid by Air Force F105 Thunderchiefs on the Kep railroad yard 38 miles northeast of Hanoi and close to the much-battered MIG air base at Kep.

Air Force fliers claimed destruction or damage of boxcars in raids on two other rail yards one 37 miles northeast of Hanoi, the other 50 miles north-east of the capital.

OIL FIRES
Simultaneously, U.S. Navy fliers from the aircraft carrier Bon Homme Richard claimed damage or destruction of boxcars and four oil fires during strikes against the main rail line from Hanoi running south to the important traffic center at Thanh Hoa. Fliers from the nuclear-powered carrier Enterprise penetrated 46 miles north-east of Hanoi to hit at a highway bridge. Other planes from the Enterprise also attacked storage areas, rail sidings and bridges around Thanh Hoa and Vinh.

In air action over South Vietnam, U.S. B52 bombers staged two raids Saturday night and Sunday morning against enemy troop concentrations and base camps.

Peking Besieges Indian Embassy

PEKING (Reuters) — China, put the entire staff of the Indian embassy and their dependents under siege today in the embassy's walled compound in Peking in apparent retaliation for an attack on the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi.

About 60 Indians were in the embassy, surrounded by hundreds of chanting demonstrators.

Wives and families were taken to the embassy compound this morning after Ram Sahai, Indian charge d'affaires, was called to the foreign ministry and told that unless they were taken there within less than two hours their safety could not be guaranteed.

Earlier, yelling Chinese staged an angry demonstration outside the gates of the Indian Embassy.

Two small buses from the British mission and private cars, all driven by diplomats, were used to rush families to the embassy which was already surrounded by yelling demonstrators.

The Indians had to get out of the cars in the street and pass among the chanting Red Guards and workers to reach the embassy gates.

Legislators Remain In Detention

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — The army-led government announced Saturday that 36 former Greek legislators are under house arrest, in detention camps or in jail for activities against the regime.

A government statement said some of them, belonging to the three major parties ranging from extreme left to right, are charged with conspiring to undermine the government.

The same statement said, however, that 3,300 political detainees out of 6,138 rounded up during the early stages of the April 21 military coup, have been released.

Buy a Volvo Canadian, keep it a long time, and get out from under car payments for a change.

What's a long time? Eleven years is a long time. That's how long Volvos are driven in Sweden, where there are no speed limits on the highways and there are 70,000 miles of unpaved roads.

How long will a Volvo last in Canada? We don't know yet. Volvos have only been here nine years. But if you had a Volvo compact and kept it half that eleven years you could spend your money on something besides car payments. And you'd save money on gas, too. Volvos get 30 miles to the gallon even with automatic transmission. Come in any time and test drive one.

Highway Hospitality

MOST VISITORS to Canada during centennial year will travel by automobile, and in this context the national highway safety council's project is appropriately summed up in the motto "Hospitality on the Highways."

The idea, obviously, is to show every courtesy possible to visiting motorists, which normally one should do in all contacts with guests whether private or of the public domain. A birthday in any case is an occasion when cordiality and goodwill should be uppermost, and when it is a hundredth birthday there is special cause for this to be exercised in maximum measure.

Hospitality on the highways of course is something that deserves attention even if no guest ever came to drive on our roads and streets. The obligation is always present and it pays dividends; when the rules of the road are observed the toll of accidents is lessened.

This is a subject that because of sheer repetition tends to have the impact of safety dulled. But it is one that can never be of small importance. Both for the sake of visitors and home motorists alike the need to drive with care and consideration is never absent.

When a nation loses 44,893 lives in war, as Canada did in the years 1939-45, the public conscience is touched and annually reflected in memorial services which reflect deep regret. Yet during the last 12 years Canadian traffic fatalities totalled no fewer than 45,141. Unhappily such a toll has come to be accepted as the price of modern motor travel, and the mourning is private and personal.

Last year's highway death toll of 5,258 was of itself far more than Canada suffered in the famous battle of Vimy Ridge, which caused 3,598 fatal casualties.

These are comparisons which should strike home and be heeded when the safety council urges the practice of hospitality on the highways. The special emphasis is on courtesy to visitors in keeping with the centenary year, but this virtue is applicable to all motorists, hosts and guests in common, and in all years.

Most motorists are polite enough on the highways but observance of the well-known safety rules is something that cannot be overdone or stressed too often. The incidence of highway accidents should never be taken for granted and the safety factor should be ever-present in all who drive a motor vehicle of any kind.

If during the summer of centennial year the customary toll could be cut even in half this would be the most satisfactory feature of the entire Canadian confederation centenary.

Seeing Is Believing

A GOOD MANY PEOPLE still may scoff, but in the defence department at Ottawa the sightings of "unidentified flying objects" are treated with cautious attention. In fact, the advice of officials there is for anyone seeing such phenomena to report them immediately to the nearest RCMP detachment or to the department directly.

The national defence minister himself, Mr. Paul Hellyer, keeps an open mind on the subject. "We neither declare that we believe such objects exist nor dismiss any report of UFOs as being without foundation."

The minister and Ottawa officials may have been impressed by recent sightings reports:

Dr. William Barry, an psychologist at the University of Ottawa, watched two saucer-shaped objects over the capital on June 3;

So did his neighbor, J. P. Lecours, a flyer for 27 years;

So did a number of other neighbors.

And out in the Falcon Lake area of Manitoba, Steven Michalak walked up to a strange object and actually touched it, and was burned when it suddenly took off.

For these people seeing is believing, and none dare call them fool or liar.

In a Hurry

IT WAS SUGGESTED in this space a few days ago that the abrupt cancellation of popular TV programs in order to air the interminable and argumentative debate of delegates at the UN did not sit well with many viewers who found this kind of TV far from edifying or entertaining. The substitution seemed to indicate that televising the Canadian Commons debates wouldn't exactly rate very highly either.

The CBC obviously doesn't think so, and is impatient to get its cameras into the halls of Parliament. So much so in fact it didn't wait for by-your-leave before trying out the experiment.

Parliament doesn't object to sampling the idea of having its deliberations processed by TV cameras, and is willing to give this a trial, particularly in a pilot shot as a centennial project. But it objects to the intrusion of the CBC without its permission, which it most certainly has a right to expect. No wonder MPs took umbrage when they saw four cameras mounted in the Commons, greatly to their astonishment.

Especially since CBC producers had been told that at this point anyway the presence of its cameras wouldn't be appropriate. The nationally-owned television network, a creature of Parliament and the taxpayers the latter represents, thus paid no heed to the injunction to keep out. It was apparently bent on forcing its will on the Commons as well as on TV watchers across the country. It has not been apparent that the latter have asked for this kind of program.

It is always possible of course that Commons debates might catch on and so surprise everyone by a high viewing rating, but as Prime Minister Pearson remarked it was unfortunate the CBC didn't await a definite decision on the subject in order that the television of Parliament could be properly planned and carried out.

The cameras disappeared quickly after they were spotted and perhaps it was merely an excess of zeal that placed them there. The true test of this type of program has to be proved and this can't be ascertained until an initial filming takes place. But the CBC overshoot its mark by being in too much of a hurry.

One wonders how the TV cameras ever got into the Commons; someone in some kind of official capacity must have observed them being put in place.

The Arab-Israeli Conflict

Opposing Views of the Two Peoples

By PROFESSOR ARNOLD J. TOYNBEE

I WILL try to put, first, the Israeli view of this as I see it, then the Arab view, and finally my own view. I am neither an Arab nor an Israeli. I am British, so I feel deeply my country's share in the responsibility for this tragic conflict between two other peoples.

Britain issued the Balfour Declaration in 1917; Britain was in power in Palestine for 30 years ending in 1948; Britain's precipitate abdication in Palestine after the Second World War left the way open in 1948 for the first of the three Arab-Israeli wars.

The Israeli view of the conflict's history: We are Jews, the living representative of Judah, one of the 12 tribes of Israel that conquered most of Palestine in the 13th century B.C. We held Judah's share of the conquered territory for seven centuries, till we were deported by Nebuchadnezzar in 587 B.C. We were back again within less than half a century, and we then held Judaea, once more, for the next 773 years, till we were evicted by the Romans in A.D. 135. We have never renounced our claim to the land of Israel. We have always hoped, believed, and proclaimed that we shall get this land back again. It is our land, we contend.

After another 1883 years (continuing the Israeli view) we did recover a foothold there in 1918, and during the half century since then, by devoted hard work, ability, and military valor, we have built up our present national state of Israel, and have inflicted three smashing defeats on the Arabs, who have been trying to evict us once again.

We want to have a country of our own again, like other peoples and like our own ancestors. We also need to have a country of our own, because, since the conversion of the Roman Empire to Christianity in the fourth century A.D. we have been penalized and persecuted by the Western Christian majority among whom we have had to live. This persecution has culminated in the unprecedented crime of genocide which has been committed against us in our lifetime by a Western people, the Germans, in Europe. We are not going to let the Arabs commit the same crime of genocide against us here, in our own land of Israel.

The Arab view of the conflict's history: In 1918, 90 per cent of the population of Palestine was Arab, and Palestine had been ours since we conquered it from the Romans in the seventh century A.D. Since 1918, a militant and aggressive foreign body has been thrust into the heart of our Arab world. This has been done, against our protests, by force of arms—British force until, under the protection of British bayonets, the Zionist Jewish invaders had built up sufficient force of their own to be more than a match for our Arab strength. Then the British scuttled, and left us to our fate. Our fate has been that 900,000 Palestinian Arabs (there are more than a million of these now) have been forcibly deprived of their homes and property and have been turned into refugees, living on a dole.

This is the first of four parts of an article on the history and prospects of the conflict in the Middle East written for United Press International by the eminent British historian-author, while on a visit to California.

Any Palestinian Arab refugee who tries to return home and resume possession of his property is shot by the Israelis, who have robbed us of our country and our property. The Palestinian Arabs who have not lost their homes are being treated by the Israelis, under whose rule they have fallen, as penalized second-class citizens. The Arab territory that the Israelis have seized by force stretches from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea at Elath.

Travelling Supply

Water By Ship

SEAGOING distillation plants—fresh water ships—may become familiar sights in Mediterranean and other areas where drinking water is scarce. British plans for them were reported at the European Symposium on Fresh Water from the Sea in Athens in May.

The idea is a ship producing 200,000 gallons a day of fresh water from a flash distillation plant. It could be built, commissioned and delivered for £384,000 ($1,152,000).

Such a ship could supply 12 communities of 5,000 people each 100 miles apart. Four times a year the ship would call at the local port and spend six and a half days producing over 1,200,000 gallons of fresh water and pumping it ashore. The odd half day would be spent at sea moving on to the next port.

On this schedule, every person would get 12 litres of water a day at cost of about one cent all the year round. Shortage of fresh water is not simply a drinking or food supply problem. It can keep out industry, hamper tourist trade and prevent prosperity. A floating fresh water factory could help to get over these difficulties.

The design study, made by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Engineering Group and the British Ship Research Association, is based on typical island or coastal communities in the Mediterranean or Near East waters. But the ship and plant could work in other similar areas in the world.

The ship itself is a 1,900-ton single-deck vessel with the multi-stage flash distillation plant, designed by the leading firm of Weir, Westgarth, housed on deck. Twin engines give it a speed of eight to ten knots. One month each year is allowed for dry docking and for the ship being out of action for other reasons.

Costs have been worked out on current fuel prices in the Mediterranean, a nine-man crew, 20 years amortization and 6½ per cent interest rate.

Other forms of floating fresh water factory are being considered. Communities living in protected coastal waters could be supplied by plant mounted on a barge or platform and towed to where it is needed. (British Information Services.)

the Arabs, not the Germans, pay for the Germans' crime. In Western eyes, the Germans may be criminals, but they are also fellow-Westerners, so they are privileged. We Arabs do not count. We are "natives," just part of the fauna of Palestine. We have no human rights. The Israelis, on the other hand, have the West's ear, the West's sympathy, and the West's support. In Western countries, the Jews have money-power and voting-power, which we Arabs do not have there. Also, the West unlike us Arabs, had a bad conscience about its past treatment of the Jews. So the West wants to compensate the Jews—as long as this is done, not at the West's own expense, but at ours.

We are never going to submit to this injustice, the Arabs say. The Israeli intruders are the spearhead of Western imperialism in the Arab world. We have suffered from Western aggression in Palestine once before. That time, it was the Crusaders. We succeeded in expelling the Crusaders, though that took us 200 years. We are going to expel the Israelis too, however long this may take us. (To be continued.) (Copyright, 1967.)

What was far from routine came when John G., emerging from what obviously had been a deep reverie, began wondering out loud what on earth John A. would have done and said, if a century younger, he had lived to see this young and this Parliament.

Ah, mused John G. speculatively on the question, John A., amazed by today's Commons, would have exclaimed "How calm it is," for the "Old Chieftain" had been a rough one, and the House a century ago a tough one.

And of today's Official Opposition, murmured John G. with some pride, John A. definitely would have uttered an astonished "How big it is!" for it was in simple truth, added its leader, the biggest-by-far ever, infinitely bigger than anything the "Old Chieftain" had led in his 19th century parliamentary day.

And what would John A. have said about the 18th successor to his first prime ministership, the Liberals' Lester B. Pearson, the common denominator of the three nations is that, at one time in their history, they held the initiative in world affairs. As long as this was the case they remained a mystery, to rejoin afterwards the ranks of common mortals.

This strange evolution seems to be the consequence of the sad fact that numerous political commentators do not what they are talking about. Pressed by the demands of their profession, they are compelled to explain anything without the time and the means to gather factual information. Because the country holding the initiative is in the centre of interest, it is the main object of editorial opinion. Each political article has its part of prophecy; hence the imperative need for those who know but little of the subject and whose margin of error is consequently fairly wide to keep an escape hatch, the alleged "mystery."

In this way, our self-styled prophets assure the continuity of their authority even in the midst of obvious mistakes. Unfortunately their amiable swindle is quite dangerous. It gives the public a valid excuse for not being interested in international affairs. Since it is impossible to know truth, why bother about it? Now a well-informed nation is the indispensable condition for an effective foreign policy. But well-informed nations are few in today's world. This state of affairs leads to such monumental errors as the ignorance concerning Hitler's plans, when he had given us his entire program in "Mein Kampf."

Today things are not very different. Mao Tse-tung has never hidden his intentions. It is only our side which insists on ignoring the Communist leader's designs. This attitude, tragic in the years before the Second World War and the time of bombers and armored cars, might well mean the end of humanity today, when dictators can set in motion intercontinental ballistic missiles with nuclear warheads. (Copyright, 1967, by King Posters Syndicate, Inc.)

There are few signs that the idea of spending a holiday at home, now being actively campaigned through advertising, will have any lasting effect. The fact is that "packaged" holidays abroad can often be cheaper, and certainly more fun, than holidays in Britain.

But, in fairness, Britain is trying even harder for the overseas tourists. Directors from eight European countries recently signed an agreement to establish a working committee to improve international tourist relations. After the conference, which was held in the Yorkshire resort of Scarborough, Mr. Alistair McLean of the British Travel Association, said: "We should be foolish to try to compete with Mediterranean sunshine. We are not particularly keen for individual resorts to say 'Come to Sunny Somewhere.' Sunshine is a nice bonus, but I think it is a mistake for Britain to talk about the Costa Clyde or Cornish Riviera."

Later this year, although a little late for the present holiday season, the BTA is to produce a list of hints for "happier holidays" for foreign visitors which will be circulated to British hoteliers.

As another conference delegate said: "Tourism is Britain's biggest dollar earner. We must educate ourselves if we are going to accommodate foreign guests, whether they be working men from Brussels, long-haired Swedes or mini-skirted Continentals." (1978-Copyright)

Ottawa Offbeat

Flesh and Stone

By RICHARD JACKSON, Colonist Ottawa Bureau

IT WAS just a flash in time—a 10-second item in the television news—and it faded from the screen before you knew, really, what had been happening. Pity, too. For it was one of the magic moments, striking like a bolt of lightning to light up the usually drab parliamentary sky.

That old political stager—the greatest actor in the Commons cast in nearly 30 years—was putting on one of his you've-got-to-see-it-to-believe-it performances.

John G. Diefenbaker, Canada's 18th prime minister, in what he called "a quiet time," was communing with the man he most revered, Canada's first prime minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, dead these 76 years. Only Dief could have pulled it off, and gloriously.

Watching it admiringly, one of his few remaining but still most devoted followers mourned that it was too bad—too bad Dief's truly astounding talent for parliamentary fantasy as Opposition leader hadn't been matched by an equally astounding gift for parliamentary reality as prime minister.

If it had, how different, mused the Conservatives from benchers who sat in the Cabinet with Dief, these last five wilderness years might have been.

There, towering 30 feet overhead on the East Lawn, just outside the Senate entrance to the Centre Block, on a pedestal of granite, stood Sir John A., the "Old Chieftain," in stone, staring with unseeing eyes out across Parliament Hill as it still peering into the mists of the future.

And there at his feet, grizzled grey head bowed as if in prayer, John G.

It would be, Dief had announced in advance, a "short commemorative visit" he would be paying to Sir John on the 76th anniversary of the first prime minister's death.

There was a brief wraith-placing, of course, with Sir John's name spelled incorrectly on the card, but this was little more than routine.

What was far from routine came when John G., emerging from what obviously had been a deep reverie, began wondering out loud what on earth John A. would have done and said, if a century younger, he had lived to see this young and this Parliament.

Ah, mused John G. speculatively on the question, John A., amazed by today's Commons, would have exclaimed "How calm it is," for the "Old Chieftain" had been a rough one, and the House a century ago a tough one.

But, in fairness, Britain is trying even harder for the overseas tourists. Directors from eight European countries recently signed an agreement to establish a working committee to improve international tourist relations. After the conference, which was held in the Yorkshire resort of Scarborough, Mr. Alistair McLean of the British Travel Association, said: "We should be foolish to try to compete with Mediterranean sunshine. We are not particularly keen for individual resorts to say 'Come to Sunny Somewhere.' Sunshine is a nice bonus, but I think it is a mistake for Britain to talk about the Costa Clyde or Cornish Riviera."

Later this year, although a little late for the present holiday season, the BTA is to produce a list of hints for "happier holidays" for foreign visitors which will be circulated to British hoteliers.

As another conference delegate said: "Tourism is Britain's biggest dollar earner. We must educate ourselves if we are going to accommodate foreign guests, whether they be working men from Brussels, long-haired Swedes or mini-skirted Continentals." (1978-Copyright)

There are few signs that the idea of spending a holiday at home, now being actively campaigned through advertising, will have any lasting effect. The fact is that "packaged" holidays abroad can often be cheaper, and certainly more fun, than holidays in Britain.

Official Sphinx

By OTTO VON HABBURG

A MIDST the innumerable commemorations dealing with events in China, one remark continuously pops up: "China is so mysterious that it is impossible to judge its reactions. This implies that those who write on the subject are courageous men taking great moral risks. One must be understanding if they are mistaken."

This statement seems plausible at first sight. China is enormous, far away, frequently closed to strangers. Since 1950 it has been practically inaccessible. The tourists admitted have seen only what the regime wanted.

Thinking over the matter, one will nevertheless note a strange fact. Before the Second World War we were told of the German mystery; no means of knowing what was hidden in the soul of the nation ruled by Hitler. Then came the Cold War and things changed abruptly. Russia became the impenetrable secret. Subsequently, without any major change in Soviet practice, the lessening tensions made Moscow easy to understand. Its place as the official sphinx went to China.

The common denominator of the three nations is that, at one time in their history, they held the initiative in world affairs. As long as this was the case they remained a mystery, to rejoin afterwards the ranks of common mortals.

This strange evolution seems to be the consequence of the sad fact that numerous political commentators do not what they are talking about. Pressed by the demands of their profession, they are compelled to explain anything without the time and the means to gather factual information. Because the country holding the initiative is in the centre of interest, it is the main object of editorial opinion. Each political article has its part of prophecy; hence the imperative need for those who know but little of the subject and whose margin of error is consequently fairly wide to keep an escape hatch, the alleged "mystery."

In this way, our self-styled prophets assure the continuity of their authority even in the midst of obvious mistakes. Unfortunately their amiable swindle is quite dangerous. It gives the public a valid excuse for not being interested in international affairs. Since it is impossible to know truth, why bother about it? Now a well-informed nation is the indispensable condition for an effective foreign

Nasser Trapped in Shocking Economic Mire

Egypt's Financial Mess Appalling

By DON COOK, from Cairo

President Gamal Abdel Nasser is in worse shape economically than the bankrupt Khedive of Egypt, who was forced to sell his shares in the Suez Canal to Britain to bail out his country in 1875.

This time, of course, there will be no resale of the canal to save Egypt, and in fact nobody has the faintest idea how Nasser is going to get out of the appalling financial mess in which his country is mired. There is not a single encouraging or hopeful fact or figure in the Egyptian economic outlook and, if anything, it is going to be much worse at the end of this year than it is today.

Here are the main points in this catalogue of economic disaster:

Egypt is running an annual balance-of-payments deficit of approximately $500,000,000. There is not a single country in the world where she has any trading surplus or favorable exchange balance.

Apart from her balance-of-payments deficit, Egypt must also find $200,000,000 during 1967 to cover short-term loans which are falling due, and debt-servicing to the West on International Monetary Fund advances and other transactions.

Against this her reserves at the end of May totalled a mere $120,000,000, of which an estimated $90,000,000 was in gold.

Canal Out of Use

Egypt has virtually no industrial export trade. Her chief source of income is the Suez Canal, which produced $230,000,000 in revenue in 1966, but is now blocked for an indefinite period.

Her cotton crop, worth $220,000,000 last year, is already committed for 1967 in trade barter deals.

Tourism was worth an estimated $30,000,000 in overseas earnings in 1966, but the Arab-Israeli war has finished the tourist business for 1967.

Egyptian oil consumption is approximately 190,000 barrels daily, most of which is covered by domestic production—but the Israelis have captured Egyptian wells along the Sinai coast producing 100,000 barrels daily which Egypt will now have to make up by imports. Even if they return to the Sinai, the Egyptians are not likely to find those wells in working order.

Best estimates are that Egypt probably has a maximum of two months grain supply on hand, and no money to buy more. China's offer of 15,000 tons represents less than a month's consumption, and in any case will be a politically diverted shipment of Canadian wheat which the Chinese are unlikely to be able to repeat. Starvation in Egypt before the summer is out looms as a distinct possibility.

Dam Bills Come In

Payment for the vast Aswan High Dam project is just now beginning to become an acute foreign exchange problem, as the bills for main generating equipment and machinery come in. The dam is about 70 per cent completed, but the expensive outlays, as opposed to labor and cement, are still to come.

Nasser

BACKLOGGED

Egypt had obtained an estimated $1,000,000,000 worth of military equipment from the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, and other Communist bloc countries, virtually all of which is now destroyed. Nobody knows exactly what the payment arrangements were or how much were simply gifts. But the best estimate is that only $200,000,000 of this bill has been paid. Whether the rest will ever be paid or whether it will simply have to be a write-off for the Russians is something the Egyptians and Russians will no doubt argue between them.

Egypt is $22,500,000 behind on payments to the International Monetary Fund. Her efforts to arrange private bank financing of repayment to the IMF so she could then borrow more collapsed just before Nasser embarked on his moves to close the Strait of Tiran to Israel. In the disaster in which he now finds himself, he is unlikely to be a very good credit risk for a long time to come.

Where Can He Turn?

Nasser also owes $70,000,000 in Commodity Credit Corp. grain bills to the United States and another $14,000,000 under the U.S. Food Aid program. He has received approximately $1,200,000,000 in American aid and another $700,000,000 in help from the Soviet Union, including $200,000,000 from the Russians for the Aswan Dam.

Where can he turn? Whatever Russia might feel about the political wisdom of bailing Nasser out once more, the fact is that her own economy cannot stand the strain of much additional aid.

China's gestures will be political and neither lasting nor very effective. Relations have been broken with the United States, and not even starvation is likely to bring Nasser knocking at President Johnson's door.

The one remaining possibility is the oil-rich Arab states might be persuaded to bail Nasser out. This will undoubtedly be the subject of much intensive bargaining. Kuwait, for example has already poured $100,000,000 into Nasser's treasury, and the hat will be passed all up and down the Persian Gulf.

Earnings Cut Off

Yet part of the paradox of the incredibly appalling situation in which Nasser has landed himself is the fact that he has persuaded these states to support him by cutting off their oil and their earnings in the West.

If he now wants their economic aid, the only way they can get the money to pay Nasser's bills will be to turn the tape back on and sell their oil to those who can buy it.

Similarly any Nasser attempt to make political capital out of closure of the canal would add to his own insolvency and starvation every day the canal revenues remain suspended.

This economic stagnation is apparent in the smallest ways. The Nile Hilton Hotel, for example, which last year took in $250,000 in hard currency for Egypt, was allowed to spend only $40,000 for imported replacements and new equipment. The room air conditioner motors are wearing out and breaking down daily without hope of repair.

The worst of all of this, perhaps, is the fact that 80 per cent of the Egyptian people live in such squalor and near-starvation that Nasser's disaster is not going to make much difference in their lives anyway. This is one reason why Nasser can go right on.

School Board Venture Excellent Idea

Hot-Line Aired Grievances

A LOOK AT LEARNING

By BILL STAVDAL

A venture in seeking public opinion produced unexpected results for the Greater Victoria School Board last May. The lesson it taught, if put to use, could bring about better understanding between the public and the school system.

Just before the May 13 school construction plebiscite, trustees took turns answering queries on a special school board office hot-line. It was part of the promotion campaign to ensure passage of the plebiscite.

One board member who did her stint on the hot-line was Frances Thompson, senior of the nine trustees. Despite nearly 10 years' school board experience, Mrs. Thompson was slightly surprised at the public's response to a chance to speak out.

"They weren't so much interested in the referendum as in telling us what they thought of the school system and discussing their children," Mrs. Thompson recalled last week.

Older residents criticized "frills" such as gymnasiums and other things, though they weren't always sure what the frills were.

"One man complained about the swimming pools, and I just about fell off my chair, because we don't have any," said Mrs. Thompson. "He said we probably would soon."

People with children phoned up to discuss difficulties they were having with school staff and to ask explanations about the new curriculum.

"And yet they didn't want to go to their own schools and principals to talk about it," said Mrs. Thompson.

Some of them were phoning because they didn't know who to talk to in the school administration, or they didn't know how to contact the school board.

Mrs. Thompson went on to observe: "And then, too, there is a good deal of fear. If things are wrong in the school, parents don't like to complain. They don't want their children singled out."

"You don't have this attitude where there is a good parent-teacher association. The principal himself has to generate this interest, and not all are prepared to do it."

Mrs. Thompson, God bless her, said she would like to re-open the hot-line this fall. This excellent idea, however, is just one small part of the public relations job which all school boards should be doing in a time of change.

Despite occasional news-letters from school or from board offices, parents are generally in the dark about what's happening in the classroom. Report cards, to take just one example, remain a serialized mystery. You get a new instalment every two or three months but you never learn the precise meaning of G, N or X.

While we wait for the information situation to improve, I invite puzzled parents to contact me care of the Colonist. Problems of greater general interest — along with some answers — will appear in this space in the near future.

Celebrity Routine in High Gear

Red Carpet Getting Worn

Well, it was nice to see the prime minister of Bavaria visiting City Hall during National Veterans' Week although, when he and his entourage stepped out on the balcony adjoining the council chamber and overlooking Centennial Square, I had to fight down the impulse to shout "Sieg Heil."

We have had a spate of visiting celebrities in the past few months: an emperor, a queen, a princess and high officers of state. It's getting that the people down at City Hall roll into their routine without even thinking.

The police muster their guard of honor, the city clerk's office gets the visitors' book ready for signing and the janitorial staff takes the wrappings off the red carpet. Arrangements are made to obtain the standard of the visitor's country ready for the hauling up the flag-pole as the cavalcade of cars draws up the main entrance.

CITY HALL COMMENT

By A. H. MURPHY

And the ceremony of reception has its own format. The Mayor and Mrs. Stephen meet the celebrity and escort him into City Hall. There, depending on his importance, he is given an address of welcome or entertained in the mayor's office.

Gifts are exchanged, the visitors' book is duly signed and the trek begins across Centennial Square. The square is proudly shown off and the visitor taken into the Senior Citizens' Activity Centre where he meets a few old people and is shown the facility.

Back across the square again, through City Hall rotunda and out to the cavalcade. A round of handshaking and best wishes and away they go.

It's all very civilized and the square is something to be proud of although, if the warm weather stays with us and events of the past week continue, they may have to sweep out the hippies necking on the grass before the arrival of the visitors.

Victoria has never had such a parade of important visitors.

Next on the list will be Prince and Princess Takamatsu, of Japan, who are due here early in July.

In the same month Prince Rainier and Princess Grace, of Monaco, will be here, to be followed by Princess Margrethe and Prince Henrik, of Denmark. Later in the year Crown Prince Harald, of Norway, will be with us.

Covering City Hall these days, let me tell you, is just one gay, mad, exciting whirl for an old cynic like myself.

Centennial Paddlers Irked by Officials

EDMONTON (CP)—The Alberta team captain says paddlers in the centennial voyage canoe pageant are unhappy about the way the pageant is being run.

John Nikel of Edmonton, the Alberta captain, said in a telephone interview from Manitoba that the men competing in the pageant rebelled during Friday's leg of the journey from Rocky Mountain House, Alta., to Expo 67 in Montreal.

DIFFERENT STORY
A pageant spokesman had described the paddlers as "having a ball" on Friday's run, but Nikel told a different story. He said the 90 men competing for 10 provinces and territories in the pageant decided to defy the pageant officials and refused to complete the competitive part of the day's run.

Nikel said that when the teams left The Pas, Man., at the start of Friday's run, they were told that the weather might be dangerous as they crossed Cedar Lake 275 miles northwest of Winnipeg. If this was the case, they were told, the competitive portion of the day's run would be cut short.

Nikel said the Alberta team was two miles ahead of all the others when the centennial commission official, Bill Matthews, announced the competitive portion was being cut short.

CHANGED MIND
However, after a two-hour wait, "although the water was no less dangerous than it had been in the first place and continued to be throughout the day, Matthews abruptly changed his mind again, apparently realizing his earlier mistake, and decided to revert to competitive paddling for the last eight miles."

At this point the decision was made to rebel, Nikel said.

Subway Lion Ignored

LONDON (AP) — It really seems the English are startled.

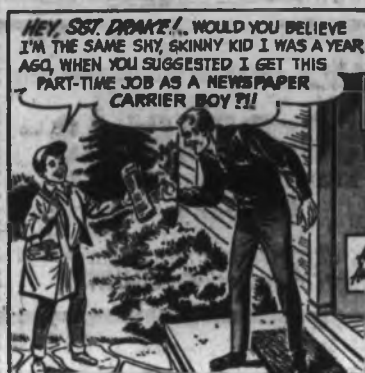

For instance, there was this fellow on the subway — dressed in a lion's skin and wearing a lion's head and reading his newspaper and minding his own business.

No one took the slightest notice of him. Maybe they thought he'd got a tooth of the sun. After all, London has had four consecutive days of sunshine — which comes pretty near to making it high summer.

The fellow in the lion's skin, John McAdams, 20-year-old insurance broker, had quite an uneventful journey home from the office — for a 56 ($15) bet.

Maybe people guessed the lion was harmless because he carried a rolled umbrella. Even lions don't carry rolled umbrellas in summer.

At home, Chance said: "Never again, I felt a right twit."

'Son of a Gun'

Small Car Pulled Out Then There Was Bus

REVELSTOKE, B.C. (CP) — Truck driver Gerald Sexsmith's legs were in traction and his arm was bandaged so he could not move it. His face was bruised and his mouth was swollen so it was difficult for him to talk today.

"There were some people killed on the bus weren't there?" he asked quietly from his hospital bed. Yes, he was told, five people were killed. He closed his eyes and groaned almost under his breath: "Son of a gun."

Mr. Sexsmith, 34, was the driver of a truck that slammed into a Greyhound bus on the Trans-Canada Highway near this town west of the Alberta border Friday.

Five persons on the bus died. Last to be identified was student driver Ranjit Singh Mehat of North Surrey.

The Fort Langley, B.C., truck driver said in an interview he was driving his unloaded truck behind a fully-loaded gravel carrier west on the highway, about three miles east of the Rogers Pass summit.

"The truck in front of me was going slowly because it was so heavily loaded," he said. "The driver was geared right down."

SAW SMALL CAR
"I signalled to pull out and pass, but as I started out I saw a small car behind me pull out quickly."

"I didn't want to send him off the road because he was coming pretty quickly, so I jammed on the brakes. The truck skidded sideways."

"I could have controlled it if I could have released the brakes. It would have straightened itself out. But if I had done that I would have gone right into the truck in front of me."

"Then there was the bus coming around the corner in front of me."

The collision caved in the front of the bus, in route from Vancouver to Calgary.

National Guardsmen Start Pulling Out of Cincinnati

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP) — The National Guard began pulling out of Cincinnati Saturday after the city's quietest night of a riot-torn week.

Barring new outbreaks, removal of some 1,200 guardsmen should be completed by early next week, officials said.

Announcement of the troops' pull-out was made following a meeting Saturday between Cincinnati Safety Director Henry Sandman and Col. James Clem of the Ohio National Guard.

Conspiracy To Starve Negroes?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many Negroes literally are starving in southern states, with the crisis worst in Mississippi, says a group of six doctors in a study for the Ford Foundation.

"I was told before I went there that there was a conspiracy to eliminate the Negro," Dr. Raymond Wheeler told a news conference Friday. "I didn't believe it before but I do now."

Wheeler, a Charlotte, N.C., internist, said: "It is still difficult for me to believe that this could exist in this nation of ours."

TENSION REMAINS

The tension remained Saturday although police termed Friday night the city's first "almost normal" night since rioting broke out last Monday.

Police said they were hoping things were "de-escalating and returning to normalcy" but still were prepared "for anything."

ALL QUIET

Uneasy peace blanketed the city after guardsmen, armed with bayonets, riding in jeeps with mounted machine guns, and heavily armed police dampened potential trouble. Only scattered minor incidents were reported.

At Dayton, 21 "White Hats" to offset racial disturbances apparently have had the desired effect on the city's racially troubled West Side.

FEW INCIDENTS

Incidents Friday night and Saturday were few and scattered, but included a $200,000 supermarket fire which firemen believe may have been arson.

MEREDITH RETURNING

In Jackson, Miss., James Meredith announced Saturday he would return to Hernando, Miss., June 24 and resume his civil rights march which ended abruptly last year when he was shot and wounded from ambush.

Meredith, in a statement issued in Jackson, said the purpose of the march would be "to challenge, expose and extinguish that all pervasive fear that permeates the existence of the Negro."

Methods Unrealistic Shakeup Due In Welfare

By A. H. MURPHY
Last of a series

Before June 13 when Social Welfare Minister Dan Campbell announced some changes in the rate schedule, the most a family of seven people could obtain from social assistance was $250 a month.

With the increase in shelter allowance announced by the minister, the maximum was boosted by about $30 to $40.

Rates scale down, depending on the number of people in the family to a minimum of about $90 a month.

GREATER DISCRETION
In addition to the increase in shelter allowance Mr. Campbell announced that field workers are to be given greater discretion in the granting of shelter allowances.

On top of these allowances, single recipients are allowed to earn a maximum of $25 a month and families up to $50 monthly.

Purpose of these articles has been exposition rather than criticism, and as an administrator Victoria's Alex Davidson associates himself from critical comment, but it can hardly be ignored that social welfare people both in the local and provincial spheres feel the whole welfare set-up is badly in need of a shaking-up.

THREE OFFICERS
This overall district is served by three offices, one for Victoria, one for Saanich and one for Oak Bay, Esquimalt, Central Saanich, North Saanich and the Gulf Islands, and if there isn't serious overlapping of staff and effort it is a miracle.

All three staffs are trying to tread a midway path between the needs of penniless people and protection of the public purse but it is generally felt that if the offices were combined a better job could be done for both people and public.

It is also felt by people who have made a study of the subject that a flat rate allowance, such as that made in B.C., is completely unrealistic.

The social assistance allowance should, in the opinion of social workers, be geared to the regional cost-of-living index. In these days when wages and costs are steadily rising, welfare rates should be flexible. They should be adjusted every six months or every year at least.

WOMEN SUFFER
"It is the women who suffer in these circumstances," said one professional worker.

"A mother who is living in an area where she has to pay from $85 a month or more for shelter and who is getting only $65 has to do one of two things, cut down on her food or cheat on what she is able to earn outside her allowance."

"This put the recipient in the position of cheating and the case worker in the position of condoning cheating as he well knows the position of the client."

If allowances were paid on a regional basis they could be adjusted to the cost of living in various areas of the province and the result would be more equitable all round, the worker said.

Pesticide Law Makes Gardeners Aware

Home gardeners are showing an "acute awareness" of the dangers of pesticides, nurseryman Tony Wallner said Saturday night.

"They are much more cautious when buying the stuff and I see customers very carefully reading the directions," he said, explaining that such interest would never have been seen two or three years ago.

Mr. Wallner said the new provincial regulations affecting the display and sale of herbicides and insecticides have had nothing but positive effects. "The compounds can't be kept near food and eatables need a permit, which they obtain after graduating from a department of agriculture course."

Purchasers of most of the compounds which can poison or accumulate in human tissue now have to sign a register. "Had sales been allowed to go on as they were, there would have been some real problems before now."

He explained that he himself had become more cautious with pesticides and always wears a mask and an old shirt when spraying.

Chinese Leave
TAIPEI (Reuters) — Immigration authorities say 20,000 Chinese in Hong Kong have applied for entry to Formosa since left-wing riots in the British colony a few weeks ago.

Bisons Back

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada's famed RCAF Bison Squadron of the Second World War will be reactivated and equipped with Canada's new Buffalo aircraft, the defence department says. It will be based at St. Hubert, Que., and Nain, N.B.

Expo Sure, LPs Maybe

But for a chance meeting in a Pentecost auditorium four years ago, four Victoria men would be sitting home and reading about Expo this year.

Instead, Norm Winquist and his Midnight Ramblers will be going to Montreal, playing at the big fair, backing Will Carter and talking to RCA Victor about making records.

In that Pentecost auditorium, the boys found they had been hooked into the same show as international country music star Carter. They backed him, he liked them, and they were off.

TOUR NORTH

Their cars made the tour north, Kamloops, Williams Lake. And each time they backed Carter and did their own stuff.

After that, he asked for them on each of his yearly Canadian tours.

The latest has given them their biggest opportunity — Expo!

They leave Oct. 6 and play to Oct. 15.

AFTER WEARY DAY

The setting in a trail ride and, in theory, the huge audience will be part of a campfire crowd, after a weary day of riding.

On the way back they will stop at Winnipeg and do the same campfire routine in the Winnipeg arena for five days. Then Carter goes back home to Florida, and the Ramblers go wherever the call of music and the hint of success will take them.

YOUNG BOY

"I was brought up in Youbou, where about the only thing we heard was country music," said Norm.

"Any friends who played guitars played country music," he said, "and when I took up the electric guitar, I naturally went in that direction."

Eight years ago he and his brother Bob, who plays fiddle and bass, organized the Ramblers.

GUITAR PAIR

Other members of the traveling quartet are Norm Watson, who writes songs, sings and plays rhythm guitar, and Stan Bell who sings and plays steel guitar.

When the group plays for dances in Victoria two other members are added — Fergus Heywood on drums and Don Fisher on accordion.

popular with the dance hall circuit and has been accepted by a publisher in the U.S.

GO ALL THE WAY

"We have a combination of country and popular sounds," said Norman Winquist.

"We go all the way to Tijuana Brass stuff."

Asked if this wasn't a little hard with no brass, he said, "Well, we call it Tijuana strings."

He said favorites with the group are artists like Chet Atkins and Loretta Lynn from Nashville, and Buck Owens from California.

"Nashville produces the smoothest blend of popular and western," said Norm. "California artists turn out more serious country music."

He said the group has noticed a sweeping popularity for country music in the last year and hopes to ride with the broom, wherever it goes.

More Money Made, Lost

NEW YORK (AP)—Broadway made more money and lost more than ever before during the 1966-67 theatrical season. Long-run bonanzas and rising ticket prices mainly accounted for a box-office gross of $52,000,000, up $2,000,000 from last season's banner take.

On the downbeat side, about $12,000,000 was invested in 51 commercial productions and 13 repertory company presentations. The backers can not reasonably hope for more than a tax deduction.

Among chief mourners of the theatre year, which technically ends June 30, was David Merrick who abdicated, at least temporarily, as the most successful producer with only two hits of six tries. He called it "the worst season in history."

In with the best producer record was Alexander Cohen who clicked with three imports and missed with a domestic original. He didn't think conditions were nearly as bad.

Only two of seven other transatlantic transplants flourished modestly, indicating critical and public rejection was not restricted to local endeavors.

The salesmen who josh our Maître d', Leslie about our new addition are all secretly glad about it.

They still make outlandish suggestions about it's purpose. But secretly they look forward to holding their sales meetings there and receiving buyers. (It will be available to private receptions of all kinds.)

One went so far as to ask the foreman if he could drive a nail. And you know what happened. His thumb was throbbing when he came in for dinner.

"Don't you know how to avoid hitting your thumb?" asked his dinner companion.

"How?" said the salesman, his teeth clenched.

"Hold the hammer with both hands," was the reply. Leslie, always the gentleman, went into the kitchen to have his last laugh.

Beauty, Right Beast, Left

Not since Dorothy Lamour has Bob Hope made more than one movie with any one leading lady. Not until Phyllis Diller, that is — they've released one, completed another, started a third and plan two more. And she's 59 and he's 64.

To publicize Nos. 2 and 3, each has written for the Los Angeles Times a learned dissertation on how right they are for each other. Sure it's publicity — but it's also extremely funny.

By Phyllis Diller

HOLLYWOOD — Can you imagine the thrill of signing at the age of 50 to do five movies with a man who had been your forever lifelong idol? Bob Hope is the man, revered and loved by millions, tiller of ladies, mirthmaker of men, bringer of spring, leader of the troops.

He is Mr. Sunshine. Nothing ever ruffles him. Our first meeting was historical. I was bombing in a real show in Washington, D.C., eight years ago. It was the first commercial job I had ever played. Bob had made a trip to Washington to visit his money. He had seen me on the Jack Paar show and was aware of my great beauty.

The Peanut Club was a miserable, threadbare place where even the cockroaches limped. It was a big nothing, dummy joint and the clientele matched it.

Worse Than Death

The owner was so seedy even the Elk's tooth on his watchfob had a cavity in it.

I came out every night, twice a night, to worse than silence. I came out to cranking disapproval.

The night Mr. Hope arrived I was locked in my night struggle with audience; men who were waiting to "see" the "girls" (the girls were supposed to be "mingle"), other ladies of the evening, bookies, junkies, touts and pushers. The real cream!

I was told Bob was in the audience and, after such a show, I couldn't have faced his draft board, so I was feebly sneaking out behind a post when The Great One jumped up and grabbed the post and started talking to it. Then he noticed me, grabbed me, took a good look and went back and grabbed the post.

Better Than Awful

He told me he thought I was great. Those were not his exact words. He used words like "bombing," "dying" and "fatal." Those were his exact words.

We hugged and kissed and he said goodbye to the post, of whom he had become quite fond. He claimed the post was built better than I.

The next time our paths crossed was on an airplane en route to Palm Springs. Our paths crossed because he was walking down the aisle and I was walking across the wings.

We were seat mates. I watched incredulously as he picked his teeth with a putter. Then he embraced the putter and said it had a better figure than mine.

When we landed, he showed me his golf clubs. They were being fed. Then he showed me his golf bag. He kissed his golf bag and said it had a better figure than mine.

It's sweet talk like that that keeps us together!

By Bob Hope

HOLLYWOOD — I'll never forget the day I met Phyllis Diller. How could I? That would be like Napoleon forgetting Waterloo, or Ford forgetting Edsel. Life is funny, the pleasant days, the moments of joy slip away — but a real catastrophe stays with you.

I was visiting our nation's capital — not the one in Texas — the one in Washington, D.C. — the real Camp Runamuck. And you know how it is after you've spent a day at our nation's capital, you want to forget.

So I stopped in at a little nightclub which advertised a "Phyllis Diller." At that, I must be honest, I didn't know what a Phyllis Diller was. Then she stepped out on the floor — I still didn't know what a Phyllis Diller was.

How can I describe this Unidentified Flying Object? At her very best she looks like something that had slipped through a hole in a poverty pocket.

Uglier Than Most

At her worst, a Warhol mobile of spare parts picked up along a freeway.

Her figure, if I may use that word loosely, is that of a dwarf azalea bush that has been pruned by a Japanese gardener who is still sore about Pearl Harbor.

I have been accused of being a ham. Jack Benny has been accused of being a ham. We are shy... we are inhibited... we are blushing introverts when it comes to Phyllis. Now, there is a ham. She is solid pork from the point of her head to the tip of her toes — all 11 of them.

There is a girl who takes a bow every time somebody turns a faucet on. She has a spotlight in her hair dryer. That incidentally is what they do with her hair. They dry it, after they rake and mow it, and then wrap it in cigarette paper and sell it to people who are trying to break the habit.

Prettier Than Zoo

My first mistake was signing Phyllis up for an appearance on my comedy specials. What choice did I have? She wanted to break into television and Zoo Parade was booked for the year. To say the least, she was a hit.

She's been back four times and now she gives me credit for discovering her. That is utter rot. I just opened the broom closet door and there she was.

And now Phyllis insists I made her a movie star and to show her thanks she bought a big house and named a room after me. I still haven't gotten up enough courage to ask her which room.

Yet, all things considered, I am grateful for my association with Phyllis Diller. Let the hippies have their psychedelic nightmares. I've got mine right here on earth.

A Quiet Teen Movie!

By KEVAN HULL

Yes kids, you can take your parents to see the latest teen special movie in town — and you don't even have to supply them with earmuffs and/or bubble gum.

The Linley Parsons production of Good Times, with Sonny and Cher, which is scheduled to run until Wednesday at the Capitol, lacks big beat fervor and will likely turn on only the most dedicated screamers.

But the movie does present the pop singing pair in a refreshingly free and easy manner with the plot and subplots looking more like a boutique fashion show than re-organized drama.

At that, the plot, which deals with making a movie and steering mechanism.

Sonny's dreams of what should happen, is better than quite a few of the musicals turned out in the 1940s.

The two swing and sing their way through scenes where they act themselves or Sonny freaks out to become Irving Ringo, mighty western style sheriff.

Trucks, Buses Recall Items

OAKVILLE, Ont. (CP) — The Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. says it has asked owners of about 2,500 trucks and buses to return their vehicles to dealerships for inspection and replacement of some components of the front suspension and steering mechanism.

Morry the king of the jungle, and Johnny Pizzicato, the world's worst private eye.

Willing to be made fun of, Sonny replies when asked to sing, "I can't sing."

Quer, the bar girl answers, "Don't let that stop you."

Fortunately for their fans, he didn't.

Not the most handsome of today's idols, Sonny is told by the make up man, "This nose will have to go."

The reply, "I was born with it."

Corny, but I wouldn't have him any other way.

Cher is, of course, the darling of the place and her features lend amazingly well to subtle makeup changes which, on a bet, I'd say would fool some of her most ardent supporters for at least a minute.

But then, help me Sonny. I think I'm falling in love with her.

ON MUSIC

It would seem that, despite the fears of some, the finances of the Victoria Symphony Society are in good shape.

This is not to say the orchestra is close to a balanced budget but there is evidence the directors of the society are doing better than could reasonably be expected with the funds they have at their disposal.

Following the recent annual meeting of the society, president John Meredith clarified a number of the points he raised in his annual report.

Mr. Meredith said he may have given the impression he was pleading for financial help from the three levels of government.

He explained he was in favor of public money being spent — but only in cases where it could be shown the organizations seeking help were in fact conducting an aggressive policy of self-help.

The president explained the "society is taking a calculated financial risk for the coming season. We just have to provide a better product if we want to increase our audience."

Mr. Meredith added that, while it may not be a trend, "we have already had 30 new season ticket buyers in the first three days since the box office opened."

The new board will meet June 27 for the first time to cope with the problems of election of officers, organization and the ever-present financial state of the society.

Nineteen Directors

New directors are R. W. Hinde, A. J. Longmore, K. J. Norgard and Dr. D. R. Ross. Other directors include Jack Barracough, O. G. Jones, T. L. McMaster, Dr. M. G. Taylor, Mrs. H. Thirwall, J. W. Braithwaite, Dr. J. F. K. English, Mrs. J. Gillespie, B. S. Gilling, R. E. Groves, C. L. Lambertson, G. A. Neill, Mrs. J. L. Smith, T. E. Watkins and Dr. Austin Wright.

Despite a record number of entries, more than 6,000, the Music Festival Association lost money on its centennial year show.

Mrs. H. Alexander reports the principal items causing a loss on the books came in the areas of premises and equipment

Costs for hall rental were up from $444 in 1966 to $770 this year.

Bursary awards were up from $325 in 1966 to $815. Bus transport costs almost doubled from $165 to $315.

As Mrs. Alexander points out, the festival was an outstanding success but is still the only event of its kind in Canada that exists without a sponsor.

Both the adjudicators from England, Cecil Cope and Nigel Cope, praised the event and added it was unique in that it seemed to enjoy the unlimited support of parents.

In 1968 the festival will be held April 22 to May 1. New president of the organization is Mrs. V. Berringer.

A donation from the Canada Council and a grant from the Victoria Symphony Society have helped the orchestra's principal bass player in an advanced study program.

James Mackay is in Madison, Wis., for a summer course that will last two weeks.

Business Topics

Bank History Likely

By HARRY YOUNG
Business Editor

Premier Bennett and the new Bank of British Columbia are out to make history.

In the short span of one month they are hoping to sell 3,000,000 shares at $25 each for a grand aggregate of $75,000,000.

If they do this, the bank will be the first in the world ever to start with such a big capital, and the first corporation of any kind to raise so much in its first financing.

Can it be done?

SECOND LOOK

Many people who said "no" a few weeks ago are taking a second look at the situation. They were impressed by the response to Premier Bennett's fund launching from the sophisticated investment firms. They also "felt" a favorable response from normally anti-Bennett sources. They were also amazed by the apparent enthusiasm of the man in the street.

"I am going to tell you something," said one dealer. "People are going to buy these shares even in the minimum lots of $100 just for patriotic reasons. They think B.C. deserves a bank of its own, and they want to show they are willing to support it."

LETTERS OUT

This atmosphere developed before the new Bank got out its 600,000 individual letters to every household in the province, enclosing an application for them to fill up.

Meanwhile the betting on the street is confined to the experts. Some of them are betting that the full 3,000,000 shares will not be sold by July 15, when the offering closes.

Some are betting that the 3,000,000 will be sold, but not before the deadline.

NO MORE

Others think that the 3,000,000 will be subscribed for in two or three weeks, and that the Bank will be in the triumphant position of declaring it is no longer able to accept applications.

If the latter contingency arises then the shares of the Bank of B.C. would have a scarcity value and the price would go up in the secondary market.

On the other hand if the issue does not fill out, dealers believe there could be some difficulty holding the stock at its issue price.

NO DIVIDENDS YET

One dealer points out that the shares of the new bank are not the easiest thing to sell in Victoria where so many people depend on their investment income to keep going.

The new bank will certainly not be in a position to pay any dividend for three years and perhaps longer.

"The shares therefore are not an attraction, where income is required, but they fill the requirements of those looking for longer term growth," said the dealer.

Although Mr. Bennett himself is a supporter rather than a member of the new bank there is no doubt that the Premier's enthusiasm has rubbed off in many places. He will sell millions of dollars worth of shares on his political personality alone.

SHORT MONEY SHORT

Competition for money in Canada has grown so keen that one of the leading consumer acceptance companies is now willing to borrow money on as short as a three-day period.

The T. Eaton Acceptance Company has announced it will pay 5 per cent for money lent from three to 29 days.

Hitherto acceptance corporations have rarely been interested in anything less than 30 days money.

HEAVY INVENTORIES

The continued weakening of the Canadian bond market is said to be due to heavy dealer inventories arising out of a glut of new offerings during April and May.

Several of these corporations issues are now trading at 5 to 7 points below their issue prices.

"The situation is quite serious," said one local dealer. "Even at present high yields interest in bond financing is at an extremely low level."

INITIAL DIVIDEND

He added however that while prices might slide further, the opportunities for purchasing long-term securities at extremely favorable prices should not be overlooked by the investor.

The automatic food vending and restaurant firm of Versa-food Ltd. is to pay its first dividend in July.

The Toronto-based company which supplies canteen facilities to hospitals and other institutions and also holds the catering franchise in a number of buildings including the Toronto Dominion Bank giant skyscraper in Toronto, is paying 10 cents a share in respect of its 1966 earnings.

The company reports its net profit for 1967 to May 24 was $431,000, compared with $247,000 a year ago. Sales in the same period rose to $13,119,000 from $11,362,000.

CUT IN FIBRE PRICES

Competition in the man-made fibre business has grown so intense that Britain's major manufacturer, Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd., is cutting its prices of these staple fibre products immediately between 25 per cent and 10 per cent.

More than 60 varieties of ICI's terylene products are affected. They are used primarily in the textile industry as blends.

The move is believed to be a precursor of tariff reductions under the Kennedy Round.

FUND PRICES RISE

The assets of the Royal Trust Company's Classified Investment Funds for Pension Trusts rose by nearly $50,000,000 to $262,000,000 during 1966.

The six different funds are the largest of their type in Canada.

The unit prices and prospective yields of the funds were:

Government Bond fund $87.86 and 6.19 per cent.

Corporate Fixed Income fund $91.57 and 6.70 per cent.

Canadian Common Stock fund $142.22 and 8.25 per cent.

Foreign Common Stock fund $141.36 and 1.75 per cent.

NHA Mortgage Fund $98.10 and 6.70 per cent.

Conventional Mortgage Fund $83.00 and 7.28 per cent.

H. E. Tremblaine, general supervisor of the funds said the performance of the two common stock funds during the year compared favorably with the popular stock exchange averages, particularly in the case of the foreign fund.

Case History

Computer Cuts Legal Leg-Work

Delegates to the B.C. section of the Canadian Bar Association convention held in Victoria this past week were shown how computers are going to cut out a lot of the leg-work research in the legal fraternity.

An organization has been formed in Edmonton which is pouring information into a computer which eventually will give a complete service of Canadian case history and statute law to anyone who asks for it.

"It is a sort of memory bank," said one local lawyer. "You give the machine a description of your case or problem, and it produces the most applicable cases or other judgment details."

This is the kind of information which lawyers now collect from legal libraries and registry offices.

The Edmonton organization was established by Keith Latta, a lawyer in that city, and his computer has now a fairly good bank of information on income tax and motor vehicle cases.

He is proceeding to feed-in other case history and statute law data to complete the service.

The service has been exhibited at the Bar Convention, where a B.C. Tel TWX machine is installed.

The operator dials the Edmonton number, punches out the problem and in a few minutes' time the answer comes through.

"It is going to save a lot of leg work," said one lawyer. "but it is not every legal firm which would find enough work for a tel-ex machine in its own office."

He said that in New Westminster a number of legal firms were organizing a pool arrangement and that this seemed to be an effective method of utilizing the service.

'Uneconomic, Harmful'

Alaska Dam Discouraged

WASHINGTON (CP) — The U.S. interior department has urged that the huge Rampart power dam proposed for Alaska be further postponed as noneconomic and harmful to North American water fowl.

Its recommendation to the U.S. Corps of Army Engineers, made public Friday by Interior Secretary Stewart Udall, is considered likely to gain general government support.

As alternatives for Alaska Udall outlined an Arctic development program including possible purchasing of power from British Columbia.

A five-year $50,000,000 minerals development program along Canadian lines, also is proposed as well as better surface transport, more research and surveys and better fishing exploitation.

The study of Rampart on the Yukon River has been going on for eight years and the project would cost an estimated $1,222,000,000 or more. It would create a lake larger than Lake Erie straddling the Arctic Circle downstream from the Yukon Territory. Its hydro capacity would be more than 5,000,000 kilowatts at a cheap price.

But there would be nobody to use the power and Udall discouraged the idea that the power would tempt industry.

FIRST PRIORITY

The study gave first priority for major alternative sources of development to one with more Canadian involvement.

This would be diversion of Canadian Yukon headwaters to tidewater near the Alaska-Yukon-B.C. boundary — a project the Aluminum Co. of America studied in 1952.

Udall said Rampart would flood the lakes and marshes of the Yukon serving five per cent of the North American water-tot population. Canada and Mexico automatically would be involved as partners with the U.S. in the Migratory Birds Convention.

The study included a U.S. state department opinion that a dam blocking the Yukon in Alaska would invoke the 1871 Treaty of Washington guaranteeing free navigation for Canada.

By JANE BECKER
Canadian Press Staff Writer

The prospect of tight money and higher interest rates loomed across Canada last week with the resulting possibility that houses, at least in crowded urban centres, may become even more expensive.

Yields on long-term government bonds, a prime indicator of general interest rates, reached 5.95 per cent June 15, just .05 per cent lower than their recent high of six per cent last August, and almost 50 per cent higher than on April 1.

Yields on treasury bills have also been climbing steadily during the last few weeks, from 4.43 per cent on 182-day bills June 1 to 4.59 per cent June 15.

BANK RATES RISE

Day-to-day Bank of Canada loans, which brought average interest rates of 4.25 per cent at May 31, were up by .10 per cent two weeks later.

In Toronto, mortgage lenders said they were increasing interest on some conventional first mortgages to eight per cent this month from the 7½ per cent which prevailed in May.

This makes it likely that the ceiling on interest rates for National Housing Act mortgages may be raised by at least ¼ per cent when Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. reviews it July 1.

NHA RATES PEGGED

NHA mortgage lending rates have been pegged to long-term government security yields since last November, being kept at a ceiling of 1¼ per cent above the security yield.

With bond yields at about 5.48 per cent last April the NHA rate was lowered to seven per cent. Now mortgage companies are betting it could go to 7½ per cent next month.

To the person borrowing to build a house, a ¼ per cent rise in the interest rate adds $625 to the cost of a $17,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years.

RANKS MAY ACT

This added expense could push house prices beyond the $30,000 now average through Metropolitan Toronto.

However there may be one long-term benefit from higher interest lending. The problem so far this year, for builders and buyers, has been an extreme shortage of mortgage money.

Builders say the higher rates may encourage the chartered banks, which were freed to go into the mortgage lending market by the new Bank Act in May to release more of their funds for this purpose.

CARTER REPORT

The week also saw the first formal meeting of provincial and federal politicians on the Carter Commission report on taxation.

The decision was to have senior officials make a crash study of what the report would mean to the provinces. Findings will be presented to another committee meeting in September.

Sox Boost Lead As Detroit Splits

It was pretty stealthy, but Chicago White Sox crept ahead in the American League Saturday.

The White Sox added half a game to their lead over Detroit Tigers by beating New York Yankees. The Tigers split a doubleheader with Kansas City Athletics.

And the White Sox only just sneaked by the Yankees. They beat Fritz Peterson, 1-0, for his sixth loss of the season without a victory. For the White Sox' Joel Horlen, it was the eighth win of the season without a loss.

WILLIAMS DOUBLES

Walt Williams doubled home Al Wells with two out in the eighth inning for the only run. Wells had reached first base on an infield hit and gone to second on a throwing error.

The Tigers had it just as close in their first game with Kansas City. Pinch-hitter Bill Heath hit a two-out bases-loaded single to give Detroit a 7-6 victory in the ninth inning.

But the Athletics came back in the nightcap and finally won.

Coquitlam Victory Nabs First Place

COQUITLAM (CP) — Backed by the steady goalkeeping of Joe Comeau, the Coquitlam

Adanacs Saturday night took over first place in the Inter-City Lacrosse League, defeating New Westminster Salmonbellies 13-0.

Goodmanson, Hassard Meet Today

Jim Hassard and Ivor Goodmanson advanced to the men's singles final today during Saturday's play at the Oak Bay Tennis Club championships at the Bowker Street courts.

Goodmanson dumped Jake Sotkowsky, 6-2, 6-3, while Hassard had to go to three sets to get by young Marty Taylor, 6-3, 4-6, 6-2.

Goodmanson and Sally Wood won their mixed doubles semifinal, 6-4, 6-3, over Taylor and Margaret Van Pelt.

FLIGHT FINALS
In flight division finals, Ernie Wilson won the men's singles, 6-2, 1-6, 6-2, over Larry Wood and Ivy Hill took the women's singles, 6-3, 6-0 over Virginia Rogers.

Men's and women's flight doubles championships went to Bud Brice and Mickey Muir and Ivy Hill and Kathy Egger while Faith Graham and Glen MacDonald advanced to the mixed doubles final by downing Owen Glew and Brice.

Sunday's draw:
Men's A.M. — Mixed doubles final, Sally Wood and Ivor Goodmanson vs. Felicity Graham and Jim Hassard (championship); Faith Graham and Glen MacDonald vs. Kathy Egger and Lynn MacLure.

1 p.m. — Singles final, Jim Hassard vs. Ivor Goodmanson; Margaret Van Pelt vs. Sally Wood.
2.30 p.m. — Men's doubles final, Jim Hassard and Glen MacDonald vs. Ivor Goodmanson and Marty Taylor.

Bissenden Opens Up To Win Main Event

Things were a bit too close for comfort in the first heat at Western Speedway Saturday for Bob Bissenden, so he made sure of his second main event win of the stock car racing season.

After having Jim Steen, Roy Haslam and Ross Surgenor within in a car's length in the first heat, Bissenden took the main event lead on the 15th lap of the 30-lap race and was never challenged.

MURGENOR BLANKED
Surgenor, the Island's leading driver, is the only other driver to win two main events this season, but couldn't find the winning combination Saturday. Haslam beat him out for first time of the night by .01 of a second.

Alex Paisley won the "B" main event, in which Barry Davies rolled right over and back up again, and Bill Friend ran away with the "C" main, lapping everybody but second place finisher Herman Underwood.

TROPHY DASH
"A" trophy dash winner was 15-year-old Rick O'Dell, his first dash victory of the season.

Attendance was 2,500.
Next Saturday, Stock cars return to the circuit for Kids Night with time trials starting at 7 p.m.

"A" dash — 1. Rick O'Dell, 2. Roy Haslam, 3. Ross Surgenor.
"B" dash — 1. Gary Hastall, 2. Al Watkins, 3. Tom Barclay.

WHL Cut Back to Five-Team League

The divorce became formal and official Saturday. Phoenix got custody.

In Seattle, Western Hockey League president Al Leader announced that the Victoria WHL franchise would definitely operate in Phoenix in the 1967-68 season.

Victoria fans had known for some time that the Maple Leafs would not be back, and Leader's announcement merely put the final seal on the change.

The Phoenix franchise will be locally owned by a group headed by Bob Whitlow.

At the same time, Leader announced Los Angeles Blades and California Seals have been granted one-year suspensions, thus cutting the league to five teams for the coming season.

The Seals will play in the NHL this season. The Blades have not committed themselves.

WAYNE VOLLMER of Vancouver fired a final-round 69 to win the U.S. southwestern amateur golf championship Saturday in Phoenix. Vollmer finished at five-under-par 273, four strokes better than Phoenix's Howard Twitty. . . . Harvard beat Yale

6-5, in the 19th inning. Reserve catcher Dave Duncan led off the 19th with a game-winning home run.

DRYSDALE WINS
In the National League, Don Drysdale evened his record at 6-6 as the Los Angeles Dodgers downed the league-leading Cincinnati Reds, 6-1.

Second-place St. Louis Cardinals couldn't gain, however. They went down, 3-2, to San Francisco Giants.

Jack Hilt led the Giants with two doubles and a single, and drove in two runs. The Giants picked up two runs in the third inning on back-to-back walks, followed by singles from Jim Ray Hart and Hilt.

Dick Pick Rink Wins Racquets Club Spiel

Getting a life on the fifth end, a Victoria Curling Club rink skipped by Dick Pick Saturday night won top honors in the inaugural mixed bonspiel at the Victoria Racquets Club.

Trailing, 2-4, in the finals of the Eatons event, starting the fifth, Pick's combination of Marg Inglis and Clint and Doreen Baker faced disaster when opposing skip Gary Webster went down for the last rock of the end.

All Webster had to do to score the first eight-ender at the new club was to hit shot rock, in the four-foot ring right on the nose and pass it through a port. But Webster was wide and Pick counted on.

It was still uphill from there, but Pick, making a fine shot in the eighth end to wind up with one for a 5-5 tie, stole two in the ninth and finally prevailed, 8-5.

It was the sixth straight win for Pick who hosted Steve Hayward in the semi-finals. Webster's victim in the finals was Tom Dickson, manager of Victoria Curling Club.

BUCK WINNER
Wayne Buck from Esquimalt, getting a rock in the middle of the four-foot on the home end and keeping it guarded, won the Woodwards event by defeating Gordie Moore, 8-7.

And Don Wakeham won the Hudson's Bay event by putting on the most spectacular finish of all.

Down, 6-10, coming home, he made a raise takeout with his first rock to tie six and didn't have to throw his last rock when Bill Jersey was light trying for a takeout on the heavy outside line.

SHUTOUT BALLS
He pitched shutout ball in relief in the first game as Lake Cowichan scored two runs in the eighth inning to win, 6-5. But Rawlings scored four runs off Wise and went on to win the nightcap, 6-3.

Lake Cowichan scored its winning runs on a sacrifice fly by Bob Gunderson and an error to Rawlings catcher Jim Moody who fumbled the ball when Bill Greenwell missed a bunt while trying to squeeze home Mike Hodgins.

WINS FIRST OF YEAR
George Brice settled down after Lake Cowichan scored three runs in the first inning of the game and went all the way to win his first start of the year.

Frank Lesette and Barry Coaler each had a double and a single to drive in a run.

In an exhibition clash today at Royal Athletic Park, Transports meet the visiting Japanese sailing ship's team at 12 noon.

Amazing Amateur Leads Open Again

SPRINGFIELD, N.J. (AP)—Marty Fleckman, a shy, 23-year-old amateur from Port Arthur, Tex., came on with a rush while the game's big three eyed each other like wary cats and grabbed a one-stroke lead over Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus and Bill Casper Saturday in the third round of the National Open golf championship.

It was a shocker.

Going three shots over par on the first two holes, the slender good-looking Walker Cup alternate harnessed his game in a brilliant finish, knocking in six birdies for a one-under-par 69 and a 45-hole score of 209.

He was the only man in the elite field under par for three trips over the sweltering, 7,015-yard Baltusrol course, which plays to a par 70.

CASPER COOL
The defending champion, Casper, playing it cool and cozy, surged to a three-stroke lead at one stage but ran into a rash of three straight bogeys starting at the 15th hole and dragged home with a 71 for 210.

He was tied at that figure, even par, with Palmer and Nicklaus, the two heavyweights of golf, who were paired with each other in a dream bracketing at the end of the 66-man lineup.

JACK FINISHES WELL
Palmer, his face showing grim determination, bogeyed the first hole and knocked his tee shot in the water at the third hole. He didn't get a birdie until the 18th, finishing with a 73.

Nicklaus, the Golden Giant who has been harassed by a nagging slump, went 16 holes also without a birdie but finished with a pair of fours on the back-breaking par 5 17th and 18th for a 72.

Tied for fifth, and still very much in contention with 211, were rookies pro Deane Beman of Bethesda, Md., 71; Miller Barber, 69; Don January, 70, and Gardner Dickinson, 68.

Fleckman is seeking to become the first amateur to win the open since Johnny Goodman did it in 1933, and he may have the shots and temperament to do the trick.

NO NERVES
Sandra, his pretty wife of less than a year, said that her husband, who led the first round with a 67 but moved over Friday for the expected drive of Palmer, Nicklaus and Casper, went into the third round without a nerve twitching.

"He slept 12 hours overnight — I couldn't wake him up until noon today," she said. "He never talked about the day's round at all. He was very calm."

Fleckman started with a bogey at the first, where he drove into the rough, and took a double bogey at the second, where his tee shot went into the rough and his second flew 20 yards over the green, landing in some twigs and leaves.

TWO-PUTTED
He barely was able to move the ball. Heuffed it only 15 feet, finally reached the green and two-putted.

"It beat the heck out of me," he said. "I said, 'let's get back in there, and I did.'"

Casper got a bogey at the second, missing his drive, but he rallied quickly by making an iron to within 1½ feet of the pin at the third and sending his approach pin high 10 feet from the cup at the fifth.

He seemed headed for a runaway lead when he added a birdie at the 14th, but then disaster struck.

COULDN'T SALVAGE
"It wasn't that I was tired," the defending champion said, in discussing his three straight bogeys starting at the 15th. "I just hit the ball in bad positions and couldn't salvage the shot."

He drove into the rough at the fifth and had to play his second shot safe into the fairway. He went over the green at the short 16th and chipped poorly. On the 17th, he hit his third into some high grass and couldn't chop the ball out. He had a chance to save his par but missed a six-foot putt.

Palmer and Nicklaus apparently made the mistake of playing each other instead of the course and the results were costly. They slugged away like a pair of heavyweights.

RECKLESS SHOT
Palmer bogeyed the first hole when he pitched over the green and took a double bogey 5 on the fourth hole when he drew his tee shot too fine and dumped in the water. It was a daring but reckless shot.

He saved a par on the seventh with a magnificent chip and played par through to the 14th where he bogeyed again by missing a five-foot putt. His closing birdie came on a 12-foot putt.

Nicklaus, who called his iron play sloppy and didn't putt well, bogeyed the second hole, three-putting from eight feet; the tenth, hitting into the rough and pitching short; the 10th, pitching over the green, and the 15th, three-putting from 30 feet.

MUSCLES HELP
His muscle was brought into use on the 623-yard and 542-yard closing holes. On the 17th, he chipped within three feet and reached the green with two big hits on the 18th.

Young Cuban Pitcher Operates on Rations

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP)—For a man on rations, George Lauzique is doing right well.

On orders from the parent Kansas City Athletics of the American League, the Birmingham Athletics baseball pitcher is allowed to throw only 100 pitches a game. When he reaches that number, out he comes, no matter what the situation.

The situation usually is good, however. After an opening-game loss, the 19-year-old native of Havana, Cuba, has won six straight. He probably would have more if leads had not got away from Birmingham after he left other games.

"Your arm doesn't mature until you're 22 or over," Lauzique said Wednesday in explaining why Kansas City limits his pitches. "It's for my own good, so I don't fuss about it."

Although the average number of pitches in a nine-inning game is 120 to 125, the right-handed Lauzique has managed to complete one game—a one-hitter against Knoxville. He threw 93 pitches.

In another game, he had a no-hitter against Montgomery for seven innings but ran out of rations.

Lauzique has struck out 38 and walked only 18 in 65 innings.

Manager Alvin Dark at Kansas City lets his young pitchers go exactly 120 pitches—then it's out.

PCL Brass Quits—Temporarily City to Hold Key?

By ROBIN JEFFREY

The Pacific Coast Soccer League has lost an executive and gained a problem.

At the league's annual general meeting Thursday in Vancouver, a motion of non-confidence in the executive ended in a 3-3 deadlock. The motion brought the verbal resignations of vice-president Len Burdick and director Jack Spry. League president Bill Findler had said at the start of the meeting he wished to retire.

Shortly before Joe Johnson of UBC made the motion, Victoria O'Keefe's Ron Southern and Frank Grealy had left the meeting to catch their flight back to Victoria. The Victoria vote would otherwise have been the tie-breaker.

"I haven't resigned. I've retired," Findler emphasized Saturday. "I don't want to bring the game into disrepute by using a dirty word like resign. I told the clubs at the beginning of the meeting that seven years was long enough and that I wanted to retire."

When the non-confidence motion resulted in a deadlock, Findler asked the adjournment of the meeting. He said he will talk Monday with Spry and Burdick, and the meeting may be reconvened Thursday to deal with the non-confidence motion.

SPRY SURPRISED

Spry said Findler's retirement announcement was unexpected. "It was quite a surprise to Burdick and me that he decided to resign," Spry said. "Of the non-confidence motion, he said, 'I think everything was out of order. A non-confidence motion must come on an order of business. This came under new business.'"

Spry didn't know what his future was with the league. A motion was passed (3-0 with three abstentions) to refuse his resignation. "But it's very difficult for anybody to work when you know the league is split in two halves—one for you and one against you."

In Victoria Saturday, Southern was a bit relieved that he and Grealy had left the meeting early. "We would have had the casting vote. It would have been a difficult position."

It appeared, however, that O'Keefe would have supported the executive for the sake of order.

As things stand now, Findler has agreed to carry on until another meeting can be called. That may come Thursday.

FORMAL SPLIT?

It seems, then, the clubs will have to find a successor to Findler and try to patch up the differences between their two factions. Otherwise, there could be a formal split into two separate leagues.

Findler perhaps put it best: "It's a helluva mess, but I want to clear it up before I leave."

LEFT OUTSIDERS: Seattle Hungarians have tentatively been accepted as the eighth team in the league next season. They must show, however, that they have adequate facilities.

St. Andrews has been dropped from the PCLSL. O'Keefe's manager Fred Magee has resigned. The O'Keefe executive now consists of Southern (president), Bill Sadler (vice-president), Bill O'Connor (treasurer), Grealy (manager) and Len Anderson (director). . . .

OC Cricket

LONDON (Regina)—Cricket of play cricket scores Saturday:

Surrey 239 for 3, vs. Worcestershire, Gloucestershire 238 for 5, vs. Yorkshire, Warwickshire 413 for 6, vs. Northamptonshire, Essex 44 for 5, The Indians 316 for 5 declared; Hampshire 23 for 10, Glamorgan 139, Essex 94 for 4, Lancashire 119, Devonshire 118 for 2, Somerset 238 for 6, vs. Leicestershire, Middlesex 207, Nottinghamshire 20 for 10.

If it gets a franchise, the club expects to sell season tickets and charge $1.50 admission to 20 or 25 home games at Memorial Arena.

The league is expected to involve from six to eight teams from the lower mainland and the Okanagan. Northern B.C. and the Kootenays probably present too many travel problems.

Sailor Honored

LONDON (AP)—Britain is to issue a special postage stamp to commemorate Sir Francis Chichester's round-the-world solo voyage. The one shilling, ninepence (23 cents) stamp will go on sale July 24.

ALCOA BEAT CLOCK

At Beacon Hill Park, Alcoa beat the clock to take a three-wicket win from Albions. Alcoa passed the Albion total of 132 runs with just two balls left to go before time.

Stan Jackson with five wickets for 38 runs and Joe Armstrong with three for 23 led the Alcoa attack as Peter Davies with 32 runs and Les Clark with 39 put together a strong partnership for Albions.

John Moss with 49 runs and George Payne with 33 led Alcoa batting.

BOOMING SIX

Dave Rose with 41 not out and Auld with 29 not out brought Cowichan's score to 70 for the loss of just one wicket. Rose rubbed salt into Castaways' wounds by finishing the match with a booming six.

Incogs moved into a second place tie with Oak Bay by defeating the Bays by 26 runs at Windsor Park.

Batting first, Incogs scored 122 with Geoff Rooper scoring 36 runs and Jim Wenman and

Cowichan Skein Still Unbroken

Cowichan extended its unbeaten streak to eight games in Victoria and District Cricket Association action Saturday.

Eric Kjekstad getting 20 each. Jack Payne took five Oak Bay wickets for 40 runs to lead the Association action Saturday.

Walter Tate scored 41 runs for Oak Bay while John Brazier took four Incog wickets for 22 runs and Jim Richards three for 30.

Initial financing goal is $10,000, but the team's total annual budget has been estimated at $32,000. The first expense will be $2,000 for a pre-season training camp.

Some people, however, have said they would be willing to pay a junior player's $300 tuition at the University of Victoria. That's fine with Anderson and the hockey officials.

Anderson says most of the club's personnel will come from the Island where 3,000 boys now are involved in minor hockey. League rules will allow four out-of-province players a team.

A number of Victoria businessmen have shown interest in the team and are expected to attend Monday's meeting.

Turner Bests Jerome

VANCOUVER (CP)—Track stars Harry Jerome, a Vancouver schoolteacher, and Willie Turner, the 19-year-old Oregon State flash, met twice Saturday in the 100 and 200 metre events of the Western Canadian Track and Field Championship.

Turner won both races, each time only a tenth of a second ahead of Jerome. Although Jerome led most of each race, Turner put on a final burst a few metres ahead of the finish line and took both events, with times of 10.2 for the 100 and 21.2 for the 200.

RECORDS FALL

The day saw three Canadian records broken. Cheryl Spowage of the Richmond club set one in the women's 1500 metre with a time of 4:46.0.

In the same men's event, men's division, Rick Ritchie of the Vancouver Olympic Club set a new Canadian juvenile record with a time of 3:56.1, and in the men's 400 metre, Rod Paul of the New Westminster Harriers, took first place and a new Canadian juvenile record with a time of 47.5. These made a total of six records set in the two-day meet.

Local TV Will Carry Lots of CFL Action

Football fans of the B.C. Lions will have five televised games—four of them in October—look forward to this fall.

Four games in Vancouver will also be televised, but they will be blacked out in this area unless a cablevision deal is made.

Victoria fans will get 31 Canadian Football League games, plus playoffs and the Grey Cup. Eleven of the games will be on the CBC network (Channels 2 and 6). The other 20 are set for CTV (Channel 3).

The network will split up the playoff games from Nov. 12-26, and both will show the Grey Cup in Ottawa Dec. 2.

Younger Competitors Spark Track Meet

Poor attendance forced cancellation of a number of events at the Royal Canadian Legion zone track and field meet Saturday at Victoria High School.

It was left to the younger competitors to provide some of the best times.

FAST SPRINT

For example, Ken Armstrong ran a 10.7 100 yards in the midjet (under 15) division, one-tenth of a second better than the winning time in the juvenile (under 17) class.

The situation was similar in the girls' 100-yard event. Gloria Young won the juvenile race in 12.3 seconds, and Lindsay Jack took the midjet division in the same time. Gall Williams, a bantam (under 13) was only half a second off with a time of 12.8.

Next meet is the Island age-class competition July 22.

Smell Added

LONDON (Reuters) — Madame Tussaud's have added a new dimension to their famed London wax museum — smell. They are providing whiffs of gunsmoke to go with a new wax portrayal of the Battle of Trafalgar.

Many people have spent 3 to 4 days of their vacation repairing the car. That can be costly when away from home. If you wish to bring your car in FREE we will test your transmission.

If you going to tow a trailer you may need a booster cooler for your transmission. It costs nothing to be sure you're safe!

Windows To Go?

EASTBOURNE, England (AP) — Harry Hewitt, development manager of British Lighting Industries Ltd., told a convention here the house of the future may have no windows. He said people feel a vague need for natural light but can be conditioned to improved artificial lighting which would make design a lot simpler for heating and lighting engineers.

Green Belt Laws Urged

By JIM BRAHAN

Victoria is one place in Canada which could be an actual city of gardens instead of just having the words mouthed as a tourist slogan, says Victoria landscape architect W. C. Yeomans.

He observes that the city is fortunate in having a good background of older, well established gardens and rural areas that still maintain their greenery.

"But this may not always be so. The signs on the horizon don't look too encouraging, he said, citing the Saanich peninsula's diminishing green belt as an example of how subdivisions gradually eat away the park lands.

"We need open space protective legislation," he added. Mr. Yeomans said it was naturally cheaper for contractors to build on flat lands rather than on high slopes.

He claims the major answer to help save the green belt is by proper planning and zoning, and cites Los Angeles as a classic example of poor planning.

Zoning is most important, he said, and warns that just because a parcel of land is zoned for one particular purpose does not mean it is safe for perpetuity. "It can always be rezoned," he warns.

Mr. Yeomans observed that with the rapid growth of this area's population, and the tools available to builders, there is an acute danger everywhere of denuding the landscape.

"Open space enjoyment should begin in the backyard. Yet one of our greatest sicknesses in North America today is the ever-accelerating demand for escape from one landscape to another — often to the detriment of both," he said. He pointed out that the planning of city gardens and parks leading to green belts and protected open spaces is not a new concept.

"Serious regional planners have sought to practice it for several decades. Yet today, we continue to urbanize irreplaceable farm lands, subdivide parks, log scenic routes and mine our primitive core retreats," he said.

Speaking on a worldwide basis, he said that man must get back to harmony with the landscape which has been too long ignored.

"Otherwise I am convinced we are on the road to extinction and a rating in nature's species book as one of the most classic of generic cancers."

British Colonials and some of the old German States and Colonies produced some notable pieces at Harmer, Rooke & Co.'s May 23-25 auction in New York.

A very fine top corner control block of the $2.50 green and violet of British Guiana's 1905 ship type issue cataloguing $190 sold for $230; an extremely fine Cyprus George V $5, brought $735 (cat. $300) and a Gold Coast's George V 15s, die 1, in a fresh block of four, full catalogue of $170.

Grenada's two Edwardian 10s. blocks in very fine blocks of four fetched $235 and $280 (revised cat. prices $220 and $300). The tercentenary 5s and 10s of St. Kitts-Nevis, o.g. and very fine, went for $45, and $120 (revised cat. $50 and $125); the Sierra Leone Edwardian $1 of 1904, very fine, $82.50 (revised cat. $30).

A few items from the German areas were — the 10s orange of Thurn and Taxis, used and with four margins, $105 (cat. $100); Caroline Islands' 50 pf red brown, No. 6a, lightly cancelled, $140 (cat. $200); Marshall Islands No. 1, the 3pf overprint of 1897, full catalogue of $70. The 3-schilling orange yellow of 1856 of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, fresh color and original gum, $35 which is full catalogue.

Some of the new issues for June are a set of four Bermuda stamps showing the new central post office building which has replaced the old Hamilton office built in 1888. Denominations of $4, 1s, 1s 6d, 2s 6d, carry a African Cape vultures normally eat carrion, but this one has been observed to have cultivated a taste for cooked stork.

Birds Getting Smarter

Vultures 'Cook' Meals And Storks Build Huts

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (CNS) — Ornithologists are wondering if African vultures are learning to cook and if the local hammer-headed stork is learning to build huts instead of nests.

Over recent years bird watchers in South Africa have built up a fascinating dossier on sophisticated birds. They have found that as more towns spring up, as more roads are being driven into the wilderness, and as more poles and masts, fences and overhead wires break up the once unbroken horizons, the effect upon the birds becomes profound.

The hammer-headed stork is now using cloth and cardboard to bolster the outside of its igloo-shaped nest. Some have even used waterproofing like tarpaulin and polyethylene. Is it fanciful to suggest that in a century or so they will have learned to automatically use waterproof material for their roofs?

It is no more fanciful, says Frank Carsten, a local member of the South African Ornithological Society, than asking if birds will one day build more permanent nests out of galvanized wire.

This is precisely what the pied crow is doing. He is making his nests in some parts out of discarded fencing wire interwoven with the usual twigs and string.

These same crows, usually strictly stay-at-home types, also have suddenly become wanderers across the subcontinent following passenger trains across the Karoo desert, living off scraps passengers throw from the windows.

Some birds of the African bush have had to change their habits as towns have been thrown up around them. The carnivorous butcher bird and the cheeky wagtail have taken to nesting on buildings and living entirely off city scraps.

On the fast track roads birds of prey are growing noticeably heavier as they lead sedentary lives sitting on top of telegraph poles because here they have clear, uncluttered views of the road where small creatures are killed by passing cars for them to eat.

A local bird watcher reports seeing a hawk which sits in a mass of telephone wires until sunset when he knows dense flocks of finches, blinded by the sun, will fly straight into the artificial web and kill themselves in large numbers.

But the most diabolical bird of all is the Cape vulture which was found eating a dead stork, cooked by flying into some high tension wires. The vulture hung around the spot and a day or two later was rewarded by yet another cooked bird.

Now the vulture frequently returns to the area where casualties are fairly high and farmers are wondering how long it will take for the bird to realize it can cook its own meals by frightening its prey into the wires. How long will it take for this normally unrepentant bird to become a refined epicure?

"It's a ridiculous notion in a way," said Carsten, "but is it any more ridiculous than looking at the crude, shambling figure of an early man dragging his knuckles across the veld and wondering if, one day, he would ever walk in space?"

Rhodesia Money Is Falling Apart

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (CNS) — They are getting more tattered, torn, dirty and patched with sticky tape by the day.

Most already have been in circulation for three times their normal length of service. Yet they have lost none of their financial strength or buying power.

But as the country's bank notes are rapidly approaching the end of their effective life, Rhodesians are wondering just how the inevitable crisis is going to be averted, especially in view of Britain's success in preventing the shipment of 28 tons of new Rhodesian bank notes from leaving West Germany for Salisbury.

A great number of 10-shilling notes still in circulation in Rhodesia are long past retiring age. The £1 note is not much healthier, but the £5 note is continuing to do reasonably well.

"Shocking... filthy... tatty... torn... not the sort of thing you like to have in your pocket" is how Salisbury bank tellers and shop assistants describe some of the notes.

Some of the bundles of notes issued by the Reserve Bank now include many that are patched with transparent sticky tape. Clerks sort the notes and repair them with the tape for re-issue. The very bad ones are burned.

A few days ago in a city bank a note had five large holes in it, all neatly covered with transparent tape. There was almost as much tape as bank note.

The Decimal Currency Bill has started its journey through parliament in readiness for the change to dollars and cents in 1970. The introduction of this system will in any case require a new bank note issue, and some Salisbury businessmen believe that it will be to Rhodesia's advantage, both economically and politically, if the date of the proposed change can be advanced by a year or two.

A suggestion has even been made that Rhodesia, in the interim, should use South African currency if and when existing bank notes become excessively grubby.

Camping Now in Full Swing

British Columbia's two newest provincial campsites are open to the public this weekend on the shores of Buttle Lake in Strathcona Park.

"We have just completed them and they are ready for use," parks director Harold McWilliams said.

One is a 20-unit campsite and boat launching ramp at the mouth of Ralph River, about 18 miles down Buttle Lake. The campsite road has been built so if there is a high use of the new campsite it can be expanded to 50 units.

The other is on property the provincial parks branch got from B.C. Hydro at the north end of Buttle Lake, across the bridge over the lake on the Gold River road, and turn left for the camping area.

No Ramp Yet

It is also a 20-unit campsite, but there is no boat launching ramp yet. Boaters will have to use the ramps on the other side of the bridge, as they have been doing all along. There really is little difficulty in finding a spot to launch a trailer boat.

The Ralph Creek campsite is reached by the Western Mines Road along Buttle Lake. Reports we have had indicate the ore trucks must be watched as they are giving little leeway to recreationists. Rathrevor Beach is now open to the public for camping use, but no immediate improvement of facilities is planned at the moment. A caretaker is in charge and it is one of the parks where there are three free days allowed and then a $2-a-night charge.

Other Vancouver Island parks operating on the charge-after-three-days system are Goldstream, Bamerton, Quinsam and Sprout Lake.

China Creek Site

China Creek Park, on Alberni Inlet, which is being developed in co-operation with the Harbor Commission of Port Alberni, is ready for use as a picnic site.

Marina facilities and a boat launching ramp are under construction and nearly completed. There is no camping yet, but picnicking and parking spots have been provided. The Kiwanis Club of Alberni is building a picnic shelter at China Creek as its centennial project.

The parks branch has plans for an eventual campsite on the beach overlooking the waterfront and picnic spot, but no development is in sight yet.

Work is going ahead on more camping units in Quinsam Park, but they won't be ready for use this camping season.

Water Problem

At Long Beach the parks branch is still looking for a solution to the fresh water problem. This summer a tank truck will be used to bring water to campers.

Camping is now in full swing on Vancouver Island, as we found out on our recent busman's holiday to Lower Campbell Lake.

Some camp light and some bring all the comforts of home, including the kitchen sink.

We met all kinds on our trip. There is one group of 10 girls from Victoria and Vancouver who make several trips a year to camp in various camping spots.

and they camp out under the stars without a tent. We found six of them at the Quinsam Park campsite just out of Campbell River.

Change Room

They usually take one small tent which they use only as a change room. They sleep outside in sleeping bags and if it rains they simply cover themselves with plastic sheeting, which is camping the rugged way.

All the girls are members of the Victoria Raquet Club and that is where they meet to plan their various outings. All are single girls.

The are self sufficient. They have two camp stoves, one tent for changing, and each has her own air mattress, sleeping bag and cutlery.

One has two frying pans. Another has two coffee pots. A cooler is a joint effort.

One girl is placed in charge of making the arrangements for the next camping trip, and incidentally already scheduled this summer are trips to Salt Spring Island and Galiano Island.

Fishing Visit

The six girls on the Campbell River trip this month included Joan Pariby, a doctor's receptionist in Victoria; Peggy Morley, a worker at UBC; Jane Vango, a Saanich health nurse; Betty Oolebrook and Heather Telfer, both of whom are provincial government employees in Victoria, and Beverly Sled, who works in the accounting department of a Vancouver plywood firm.

They visited our wilderness campsite on Lower Campbell for a little bit of fishing, followed by a fish fry with John Ebert presiding at the barbecue, and a jovial sing song.

Heather Telfer strums a ukelele and the girls have quite a repertoire of campfire songs.

Co-op Workers

Not so the group of vegetable co-op workers who took advantage of the in-between vegetable season to spend a couple of weeks fishing at Lower Campbell.

They camped in the same area as we did and included in the group were Alan Barker, manager of the Island Vegetable Co-operative Association; Aubrey Hull, warehouse foreman with the Island Vegetable Co-operative Association; George Smith, of Ladner, manager of the B.C. Vegetable Co-operative Association; Doug Philp, of Nanaimo, district manager of the Island Vegetable Co-op and Nick Robertson, of the Queen's Printer in Victoria. Later wives Helen Hull and Alice Barker joined the group.

This same group has been camping together for six years and for the last four have camped at the same spot on Lower Campbell. Barker was been visiting the Lower Campbell-Buttle Lake area since 1954 when he travelled in a Morris Minor car and a pup tent.

Coincidence

"It just happens the trout season coincides with our vegetable off season," smiled Barker as he fed some more trout.

'Special' Tourists

A man and wife from Olympia were chosen Saturday as Victoria's first tourists of the week for 1967.

Mr. and Mrs. John Nelson, both on their first visit to Victoria, were chosen aboard the Mv. Coho by Joe Richards of the Victoria Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Nelson is an insurance adjuster and his wife works in a travel agency.

While in Victoria, the couple will be the guests of the Imperial Inn, Esten's, the Old Forge, Buckhart Gardens, Fable Cottage and Gov'nors. They were presented with gift china from Birk's.

Tourists of the week will continue to be picked every Saturday until Labor Day.

Deer Dogs Fine

British Columbia's wildlife authorities this year will allow dogs to help Vancouver Island deer hunters bag their animals.

"Loss of crippled or mortally wounded deer during the hunting season has been found to be substantial," said Dr. James Haster, director of the Fish and Wildlife Branch.

"This regulation will assist hunters to avoid such unnecessary waste of these animals."

ADD DEER TO LIST

It always has been legal for a hunter to be accompanied by a dog when he was pursuing game birds and certain carnivores such as bear, racoon or cougar.

The new regulation will allow a hunter to hunt deer by using a leashed dog or to use a leashed dog to locate a downed animal.

The ordinance applies only in Game Management Area No. 1, which is Vancouver Island.

They came close to buying that car. Small wonder. It's been popular for a long time.

But then they gave it a little more thought. And figured they'd want a little more power for climbing and passing. And a little more all-round comfort. So they looked at Datsun.

It had what they wanted. Plus eye-pleasing interior. Plus padded dash. Plus an excellent heating-defrosting system. Plus 2-speed wipers. Plus easy handling and 100,000 mile dependability.

So they bought one.

Now they drive around smiling. Next time you're looking at cars, why not drive a Datsun—then decide.

Paint Seals Pores

By M. V. CHESNUT

PAINTED POTS (H.S. McL., Victoria) — It was most thoughtful of your husband to paint all your clay flower pots in gay colors; I'll grant you the ordinary earthenware pot is anything but beautiful and could do with some prettifying up. I'm afraid, though, that your pots will have lost their principle virtue as the result of the painting.

The reason why the old-fashioned clay pots are still favored over plastic, china, metal and other materials is because their walls are porous. Excess moisture can seep out through the unglazed clay, and air can seep in to invigorate the plant roots. This porosity has now been lost by sealing the surface with paint.

You can still use your painted pots, of course, but you'll have to be a bit more careful in your watering. Allow the soil to become definitely dry to the touch between waterings, so air can enter. Stir the surface soil occasionally, and avoid soggy soil in the bottoms of the pots.

PLANTS FOR CLAY SOIL (K.S. Duncan) — Some of the trees most likely to succeed in heavy clay soil are willow, hawthorn, mountain ash, elm and the ash-leaf maple or box elder. Among the shrubs I would suggest ornamental crabapple, mock orange, lilac, forsythia, barberry and the shrub roses. For perennials, plant phlox, geranium, lily, ranunculus, daisy, lily, helleborus, rudbeckia, peony and Shasta daisy.

DISEASE CONTROL (A.E. Victoria) — Welcome to the club, brother! Quite a few of my other readers get mad at me, too, when I advise them to pick off and burn the spotted, yellowing, or diseased leaves from treasured plants. Only too often, as they point out, there isn't much left of the plant after this stripping operation.

The thing you have to remember, though, is that NO diseased leaf ever makes a comeback. It is something like a grey hair in your head — if you pull it out, a normal hair MAY grow in its place, but under no circumstances will the normal color ever return to that particular grey hair.

Unlike the grey hair, however, an infected leaf is a source of danger to all the healthy leaves on the plant or tree, and to all the leaves that may follow. This is why I am so insistent on the early removal and destruction by fire of all diseased plant material.

If you can catch a disease in its early stages when only one or two leaves are affected, their prompt destruction removes the source of infection. The worst thing you can do is sit around hoping that somehow the yellowed or spotted leaves will "grow out of it." No diseased leaf EVER gets any better.

There are good fungicide sprays on the market, and most of our all-purpose flower sprays contain ingredients for the control of plant diseases as well as the usual bug-killers. The thing to remember, though, is that fungicides won't CURE plant diseases — except, possibly, a light case of mildew — and they are applied to healthy foliage to PREVENT infection. Remove the sources of infection first — the sick leaves — and THEN do your preventive spraying to check the spread of the disease.

ART BUCHWALD Scripts Mideast War

One-Eyed Moshe Held Up

There is no doubt that a movie will be made on the recent Israeli Arab war. Two producers have already submitted titles. Darryl Zanuck wants to call his The Shortest Day and Otto Preminger would title his Son of Exodus.

A third company is also thinking about a film called One-Eyed Moshe, but the reason they can't go into production is that they're having script trouble.

When the screenwriter submitted his story outline to the producer, the producer called him in and angrily said, "What kind of a nut do you think I am? The public will never believe the Israelis took Egypt, Jordan and Syria in four days."

"I know it sounded silly when I wrote it, chief, but it's based on fact. We can't fool with history."

"Who says we can't? John Wayne, Kirk Douglas and Gregory Peck couldn't take Egypt, Jordan and Syria in four days. Where's the conflict?"

"Well, I've tried to weave a fictitious story in there. You see, we have a one-eyed general, played by Sammy Davis Jr., of course, and his driver, an Israeli sergeant, played by Frank Sinatra. The picture starts off in Tel Aviv with the general telling his driver to take him to the front. In the next shot we see them in Gaza. This is before the titles."

"They've taken Gaza and we haven't even had the titles yet? You must be out of your mind."

"In Gaza Sinatra meets Elizabeth Taylor, who plays an Israeli machine-gunner. She asks General Moshe if she can go with him to the front. The general says all right, but asks her to keep her head down. The next scene they're in the Sinai Desert and they've captured an Egyptian armored division commanded by Omar Sharif.

"Sharif is wounded and Sinatra wants to kill him. But Taylor insists on nursing him back to health. Sharif is put in the jeep with General Moshe and they drive off for the front."

"The jeep's getting kind of crowded, isn't it?"

"Now hear me out, chief. They all arrive at the Suez Canal and Taylor, who is hot and dirty, decided to take a swim in the canal. But she doesn't have a bathing suit. So she makes everyone turn his back, except for General Moshe who only has to put his hand over his good eye. Taylor goes into the water."

"While they've got their eyes shut, Sharif steals a pistol out of the jeep and is about to shoot General Moshe and Sinatra. When Dean Martin jumps Sharif and wrestles the pistol out of his hand."

"Where did Dean Martin come from?"

"He was a drunken Suez Canal boat pilot left over from 1956. He says he's been trying to get home ever since. So they take him along with them and drive down to the Gulf of Aqaba where Paul Newman is in command."

"It turns out Taylor was an old girl friend of Newman's, but he married Eva Marie Saint, a Gentile woman who stayed in Israel after Otto Preminger made Exodus."

"Sinatra wants to kill him, too, but before he gets a chance, General Moshe orders everyone back into the jeep to take him to old Jerusalem. In old Jerusalem, Peter O'Toole personally surrenders the Arab Legion to General Moshe."

"Sharif, realizing the war is lost, surrenders too, and Sinatra offers him an Israeli cigarette, showing that even in war all men are brothers."

"Taylor, seeing Sinatra's gesture, puts down her machine gun and kisses him while both the Arabs and the Israelis cheer."

"Then General Moshe jumps back into his jeep and yells, 'Take me to Damascus!'"

"The picture ends with the jeep heading up into the Syrian hills with Taylor riding on a fender and Sharif and O'Toole waving goodbye."

"Okay," the producer says, "if it doesn't work we can always sell it to television."

SYDNEY HARRIS Attacks Low Standard

TV News Is Show Business

During the AFTRA strike this spring, when the network performers walked out in support of the newscasters, I watched the substitute newscaster, and could hardly tell the difference.

Speaking as a newspaperman for almost 30 years, I feel no hesitancy in saying that news reporting on television would have to improve enormously just to be mediocre.

The newscasters were striking for more pay, but they are not worth half of what they are getting now for what they are doing. If, on the other hand, they were really doing a good job, they would deserve twice as much as they are getting.

With a few singular exceptions, most newscasters look and sound like dummies. They pronounce the words carefully, but seem to have little comprehension of what they are saying — and most of what they are saying is just a warmed-up rehash of the press service ticker.

The few stars of network newscasting receive tremendous salaries (which they are not worth, in my opinion) for banal and superficial comments that scarcely reach the level of a decent college newspaper. They are more an arm of show business than of information; and nobody who relied on them for knowledge of the world would know enough to make any intelligent decisions on public affairs.

As for the non-stars, the ordinary bread-and-butter newscasters who were asking for more money—I can't see why a reasonably alert 12-year-old boy couldn't do as well as they do.

Most of the fault for the incredibly shallow and vapid news reporting on television must be laid at the door of the networks, which are rich, greedy and dumb beyond all belief.

The public needs information and education today as never before; and television could be, and should be, the most direct and effective means of informing the public about the most important issues of the day. That this great tool should be used mainly to swell the coffers of a few networks is a shocking indictment of the system.

Television news should be reported, discussed and analyzed by men of stature, training and background; by varied teams of professionals in public service and foreign affairs; by intellectuals, academics, and researchers in the social and behavioral sciences. By men, in short, who know how to think, and have something to say. These men would be worth a million. Their paid imitations today aren't worth a dime.

Founding Meeting Monday

Founding meeting of an Island branch of the Association for Childhood Education will be held Monday, it was announced Saturday.

Several study conferences on child development are being planned for the winter in co-operation with the Institute of Adult Studies, said steering committee member Mrs. J. B. Mills.

The Island branch of the ACE will provide a meeting place for parents and professionals dealing with children to exchange ideas and hear new information, said Mrs. Mills.

Monday's organizational meeting will be held at 8 p.m. at the home of Mrs. William West, 3995 Lockhaven Drive.

Courtroom Parade

Man and Wife Fined For Street Fracas

A married couple who tangled with city police on Yates Street Saturday morning found themselves $40 lighter when they appeared in central magistrate's court Saturday.

Lynn Smith was fined $20 for causing a disturbance by swearing and his wife Patricia was also fined $20 for obstructing a peace officer.

Both are from Vancouver and both pleaded guilty.

CAUTIONED

Prosecutor Cory Stolte said Lynn Smith was approached by a police officer on Yates at about 2 a.m. Saturday and questioned about an inadequate muffler on his car.

Lynn Smith replied with a "stream of obscenity" and was cautioned three times before he was finally arrested, Mr. Stolte said.

As police went to put Lynn Smith into the police car, his wife stepped in the policeman's way and refused to move.

"She grabbed and kicked at the police officer, scratching his face," Mr. Stolte said.

At the police station, Mrs. Smith yelled and threw sand from an ashtray in the charge office.

A woman undressing in a washroom at Elk Lake Friday nighted blond hair beneath a partition and a pair of hairy legs.

Doris Fjellstrom, 25, of 1560 Christmas, pleaded guilty to loitering and was sentenced to one month in jail.

Mr. Stolte said the woman left the area, stopped two women about to enter and notified her husband. He waited outside the room for Fjellstrom to appear.

15-20 MINUTES

Fjellstrom said he had been in the room for 15 to 20 minutes, court was told.

He told Magistrate J. A. Byers that he was new to the area and had to go to the bathroom and did not know it was a woman's washroom.

When he noticed his mistake, he left as soon as the place was vacant.

Mr. Stolte said Fjellstrom had convictions for indecent assault on a male and a female.

A man who ripped the padding in the padded cell at the city police station was fined $50 when he pleaded guilty to wilfully causing damage.

Robert Moffitt, 409 Edwards, was also fined $15 for being drunk in a public place.

He was placed in the padded cell Friday night after he began fighting and yelling.

Escaper Given Extra Term

A 26-year-old man who escaped from William Head minimum security prison Thursday afternoon was sentenced to an additional term of three months in prison by Magistrate Eugene Murphy in Sooke court Saturday.

Irvine Purdy pleaded guilty to escaping lawful custody and to breaking into a Matheson Mountain cabin. He was sentenced to three months concurrent on the break-in, and three months consecutive on the escape.

Purdy was captured at about 1 a.m. Saturday when he surrendered to a prison guard near Matheson Lake.

Purdy told the court he was a member of a work crew at Rocky Point and went looking for some cattle that were in his charge.

He lost his way and reached Sooke Road at about 10 p.m., and decided he would keep on going.

Port Renfrew Help Offered by Sooke

Sooke School Board has agreed to help Port Renfrew's Pacheenaht Indian band improve its private kindergarten as part of a five-year community development program.

The board will renovate the basement of Port Renfrew's one-room school for kindergarten use, provide some equipment and help a private kindergarten teacher gain certification for the job.

The Pacheenaht band does not have the 25 pre-school children needed to form a government-supported kindergarten, a special meeting at Port Renfrew was told earlier this month.

Last January the Pacheenaht band submitted a brief to the Indian Affairs Branch calling for community development in education, housing and tourism.

The Indians want permission to go ahead with a trailer camp, campsite and marina. They want government help to build 22 houses over a five-year period.

Crowd
Police

Two men arrested by a Saanich policeman at a drive-in restaurant at Town and Country Plaza Saturday morning escaped with the help of a crowd that gathered.

Constable Dennis Lusk arrested a man at the White Spot restaurant about 1 a.m. for causing a disturbance and being drunk in a public place.

When the constable went to telephone for a patrol car, another man joined them and a fight began.

A crowd gathered and some entered the fray, assisting the men to run away. They jumped into a car in the plaza and were driven away.

Warrants have been issued for their arrest.

Float Bench Collapse
Injures Dozen Girls

By BRIAN DOHERTY

Twelve young girls were injured when the bleachers on a float in Esquimalt's Buccaneer Day parade Saturday collapsed, pinning the girls' feet.

Six were taken to St. Joseph's Hospital and six to Royal Jubilee Hospital, where they were treated for abrasions, X-rayed and discharged.

Treated at St. Joseph's were Theresa Haywood, 12, of 1341 Lyall; Cindy Mather, 9, of 1002 Lyall; Crystal Aylesworth, 12, of 1155 Heald; Maureen Duncan, 9, of 1131 Heald; Lorie Barlow, 8, of 1158 Bowdley; Margaret Hannon, 9, of 508 Springfield.

Treated at Royal Jubilee were Trudy Bart, 9, of 920 Agnes; Janice Jones, 11, of 1194 Wychbury; Kathy Aylesworth, 9, of 1155 Heald; Sandra Price, 11, of 845 Cowper; Patti Billett, 9, of 404 Sherk; Debby McLeod, 10, of 492 Joffre.

The girls were part of a crowd of 60 children on the Esquimalt Softball Association's float.

Esquimalt police said the float was pulling from Dominion Road onto Esquimalt to join the parade when it was forced to stop.

The float rolled back, and the bleachers the girls were sitting on collapsed.

It was the second Saturday in six weeks that the hospitals' emergency wards were deluged with young accident victims.

On Saturday, May 13, 34 children, policemen and firemen were taken to St. Joseph's Hospital after chlorine gas leaked from a valve at the Crystal Garden.

The hospital's post-anesthetic recovery unit was turned into a ward for the gas victims, 13 of whom had to stay overnight.

Flapjacks

Pirate
Today Mellow Fellow

By BILL THOMAS

Sixteen men on a flapjack stand. Yo Ho Ho and a bottle of Coke.

It may not be quite the way a pirate song should go, but it did work out well Saturday for privateers plying their trade in Esquimalt Buccaneer Day.

All hands who came alongside at Esquimalt Plaza were treated to the new look in piracy. It was a sight that would have sent Sir Henry Morgan, Jean Lafitte or Calico Jack Rackham into fits of laughter.

Not a shot of rum, salt pork or weevil-infested hardtack in sight. Pirates-for-a-day, however, filled themselves with pancakes and sausages from 7 a.m. on.

RIGHT ON TIME

The Buccaneer Day parade started right on time to the delight of the crowds strung along the route.

Pirates have mellowed with the years. Instead of cutting off ears and keel-hauling people, the Esquimalt pirates trotted along the streets giving out peanuts and tossing suckers into the crowd.

There was a costume contest at Bullen Park, followed by a sports program at Langsam Park, a baseball game, and just those who like their sports tougher and rougher, a minor lacrosse tournament in the Sports Centre.

MOVING EYE BUSY

Older pirates munched sandwiches and cakes in Jubilee Hall and spluttered about younger generation.

At the sports field it was obvious the bright sun had brought out some very attractive pirate hostages in short shorts. It required a most active rowing eye to keep up with the action.

Adults who could not compete in the sports had their chance to exercise at two dances. An adult dance was held in Jubilee Hall, while square dancers got their opportunity in the Sports Centre.

Buccaneer Day events continue today with activities in Gorge Park. There will be a salmon barbecue from 1 to 4 p.m., an interdenominational service at 2 p.m., a band concert and variety show from 2 to 4 p.m. and a treasure hunt at 3 p.m. Tea will be served from 1 to 4 p.m.

Education Lab
Possible Here

By BILL STAVDAL

Victoria could become a centre of educational research if an idea called LEARN gets off the ground.

All LEARN needs is money—lots of it.

This summer a first feasibility study will be done in Greater Victoria. If the investigators say yes and the financial angels appear, a research lab involving five school districts and the University of Victoria will probably be the result.

Specialist
For Specials

Special education in Greater Victoria schools will be revamped this September under a new co-ordinator just hired by the school board.

The change is in line with a recommendation of last year's Hartick - Downey report on administration of the district school system.

Edward Oulbeck of Calgary, a specialist in administration, has been given a new post. A school psychologist also has been hired and the board will be asked Monday to hire two more social workers, for a total of three.

LEARN stands for Laboratory for Educational Advancement, Research and Needs.

SCHOOL PRINCIPAL

Its chief proponents are Dr. Fred Tyler, dean of education at the University of Victoria; J. F. Longmore, assistant superintendent of the Greater Victoria school district; and Harold Parrott, principal of Dunsmuir Junior high school in Colwood.

Teachers and trustees from five school districts have attended four exploratory meetings so far. The school boards are Greater Victoria, Sooke, Saanich, Gulf Islands and Cowichan.

STUDY VALUE

Mr. Longmore said Saturday that LEARN would investigate the value of new educational methods in south Island school districts.

Team teaching, ungrading, educational TV and individualized instruction are examples. The university, school boards and teachers have contributed $2,200 for a summertime study of the feasibility of researching individualized instruction.

No Relief in Sight

Heat Builds
Fire Threat

By JOHN MATTERS

Flames ripped through grass and timber patches in the Victoria district Saturday as the hot sun raised fire hazards to dangerous levels.

The forests were becoming drier and drier with each hour of scorching sunshine.

None of Saturday's fires caused serious damage. The worst was in the evergreens of Goldstream Park, and was extinguished by a waterbomber stationed at Patricia Bay.

18 DRY DAYS

Victoria has gone without measurable rainfall for 18 days. The last significant storm occurred on May 31, when .16 inch fell.

There was little likelihood of the drought ending for a day or two. Today's weather forecast was for a high temperature of 70 at Victoria and 85 at Nanaimo, with continuing sunshine.

As dry weather persisted throughout most of B.C., forest service officials expected a buildup in fire hazards. They asked everyone, and particularly vacationers, to be extremely cautious in the woods.

EIGHT LOADS

The Goldstream fire broke out about 10 a.m. and burned about four acres of timber adjoining a power line right-of-way.

A Canco water bomber, owned by Flying Firemen Ltd. and under contract to the B.C. Forest Service, dropped eight 1,000-gallon loads of water before the fire was suppressed.

There was no word on its cause.

The aircraft, which scooped up its water from Sooke Lake, was in the air five minutes after the Forest Service called.

FIRE AT SOOKE

Jim Gilbert of Gilbert's Anglers Service at Brentwood Bay was the first to spot the blaze at the west end of Tod Inlet about 3:30 p.m.

Shortly after 7 p.m., a brush fire in East Sooke was extinguished by rangers before it caused much damage.

The Forest Service has spent $210,500 since May 1 extinguishing 543 blazes in B.C. During the same period last year, $97,500 was spent on 648 fires.

The Telkwa-Smithers area of Prince Rupert Forest district remained the most troublesome, with eight fires burning through approximately 2,700 acres of slash.

Shelter Grant

The provincial and federal governments have authorized a grant of $2,032 toward a $4,000 shelter which Central Saanich plans to build as a centennial project in a municipal park. The local contribution will be $1,968.

Pollution

Back

Saanich council Monday night will have another round with the volatile Prospect Lake water extension issue.

Councillors are scheduled to hear a report from Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread, senior medical health officer, on whether extension of the municipal water supply to the area would increase lake pollution.

MORE EFFLUENT

Some say it wouldn't but others claim that the presence of an abundant and pure water supply would naturally result in an increase in the volumes of water used and thus an increase in the volume of effluent.

Saanich is planning to hold a referendum among Prospect Lake dwellers on whether the water system should be extended to the area, which now depends on wells for its supplies.

Saanich Costs Explained

Schools Hike Taxes

The bulk of Saanich's tax increases this year are due to higher school costs that had to be passed along to local ratepayers, says letters which have begun falling into 20,000 letterboxes.

The "information sheets" explain the sources of municipal money and how it will be spent. The total 1967 budget, which included waterworks operation and the expenditure of reserve funds, will be more than $9,000,000.

MILL RATE CLIMES

The increase in taxation are 4.9 mills in School District 61 and four mills in School District 63. The general mill rate has gone up 1.3 mills, one mill of which is for recreation.

Out of every dollar Saanich collects, 7.5 cents will go toward paying off debts and the costs of borrowing money. This is almost equivalent to the costs of police protection, which are 7.7 cents of every dollar. However, Saanich will spend 32.8 cents of each dollar on educating children from Grades 1 to 12.

Largest item in the budget is $2,229,000 for school costs, an increase of $650,000 over 1966.

Other major items: fire protection, $518,000; police and law enforcement, $550,000; public works, maintenance and planning, $585,000; social welfare, $256,000.

The municipality will invest $28,000 in street lighting, $100,000 in drainage projects, $50,000 in sidewalks, $225,000 in road construction and $45,000 in parks.

THE DAILY BRITISH COLONIST

June 18, 1867

A writer in the (Victoria Morning) News proposes to canvass the town for a vote on the annexation question. He wants those in favor to say "aye" and those opposed to vote "no." None but British subjects to vote.

Three defaulters in the last instalment of retail liquor licences were fined yesterday $5 each by the magistrate. A fresh batch of summonses will be issued today to other defaulters. Pay up, gentlemen, your dollars are wanted to keep the machinery of government in motion.

A thief, impelled thereto no doubt by our notice of yesterday, returned the till and the keys stolen from the Boomerang Inn but retained the dimes for the trouble he had been put to.

Swim Lessons Soon

And City

It's the duty of every parent to see each child grow up as well equipped for life as is possible.

The ability to swim is one of the most important skills, and for the 15th successive year, The Colonist is organizing free swim classes in both Victoria and Duncan.

Veteran swim coach Margie Naysmith again will be in charge.

Mrs. Naysmith has taught swimming for more than 30 years, beginning at the "Y", where she taught Grade 5 swimmers along with Archie McKinnon.

She has taken charge of Victoria's would-be swimmers since The Colonist classes began.

Last year "in recognition of service to the community who would not normally expect nor receive such acknowledgment from the community" she was designated Victoria's Good Citizen of 1966.

Children between the ages of 8 and 14 may enroll for the class and take advantage of Mrs. Naysmith's services, simply by filling in a coupon.

The classes are free, and will be held in Victoria at Elk

Lake on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays for beginners, and Thursdays for advanced swimmers.

Each child enrolled will receive one lesson and lecture every week for eight weeks.

Transportation is available at a cost of $2.75 for the eight return trips.

Vancouver Island Coach Lines buses will leave each morning from outside the North Ward school on Douglas Street near the Colonist building at 9:25 a.m., returning after classes.

Children who want to attend classes together must fill in their application forms and clip them together before sending them in.

Classes will start July 4.

Gale-Terry

Groom's Sword Cuts Cake

A wedding of interest was solemnized Saturday evening in St. Mary's Church, Oak Bay, when Mary Gillian Terry, daughter of Mrs. Joan Terry, Henderson Road, was married to Sub-Lieut. Charles Moore Gale, RCN, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald K. Gale of Quebec.

Canon Jones officiated at the double-ring ceremony which was candlelit, with choir boys providing the music. White snapdragons and carnations decorated the church.

The fair haired bride, charming in a gown of white organza styled with angel sleeves, came down the aisle on the arm of her brother, Mr. Peter W. Terry.

The empire bodices of the bride's gown was encircled with a band of Venetian lace and the detachable train fell from a back bow enhancing the softly flowing skirt. A rosette held a Cathedral veil of silk illusion net. She carried a Victorian posy of white roses and stephanotis.

Miss Terry had three attendants, small flower girl Lisa Higgs, maid of honor, Jo Anne Guiguet and bridesmaid Wendy Lovitt. The senior attendants wore formal gowns of deep pink shantung overlaid with pale pink chiffon and matching bodices of french lace en tone. Chiffon rosettes were in their hair. They carried pink roses and white carnations.

The flower girl's dress was of deep pink shantung overlaid with pale pink chiffon and she carried a nosegay of pink roses and white carnations.

At a reception in the Victoria Golf Club, Mr. A. G. Higgs proposed a toast to the bride. The four-tiered square cake embedded in tulle and topped with pink and white flowers, was cut with the groom's sword.

Following a honeymoon in Montreal and the Laurentians, Sub-Lieut. and Mrs. Gale will reside in Dartmouth, Nova Scotia.

The engagement is announced of Helen Barbara, daughter of Mrs. E. P. Tisdall of Victoria and the late Rear-Admiral E. P. Tisdall, to Lieutenant Michael Fraser Morris, RCN, of Halifax, son of Brigadier and Mrs. S. E. E. Morris of Victoria. The wedding will take place on July 15 at St. Paul's Naval and Garrison Church.

Summer Sun Shines For Annual Ridotto

The tree-shaded lawns and garden at the home of Dr. and Mrs. D. E. Alcorn provided a perfect setting for the annual Ridotto held by the Women's Auxiliary to the Children's and Family Welfare Service yesterday afternoon.

Summer fashions from Woodward's were shown when models Miss Wallis, Joan Thompson, Rosalie Esslin, Bernice Verneice, Maud Parks and Janice Hall strolled among the tables under the warm summer sun.

Mrs. J. M. McCoskey and Mrs. Edna Forsyth were general convenors and pouring tea were Mrs. Gordon Wright, Miss Elizabeth Forbes, Miss Joanna Drewry and Mrs. Dorothy Wronowski.

Assisting at the stalls and tea were Mrs. L. Ireland, Mrs. O. Manson, Mrs. B. Douglass, Mrs. M. Paulin, Mrs. J. P. Fawcett, Mrs. E. Fry, Mrs. C. B. Conway, Mrs. J. Ruffell, Mrs. H. F. Lear, Mrs. L. H. Shaw, Miss R. King, Mrs. R. Forbet, Mrs. M. Webb, Mrs. Hunkin, Mrs. W. F. Hilbert, Mrs. H. Hublin, Mrs. F. M. Weller, Mrs. D. A. Pickles, Mrs. N. C. Wallace, Mrs. J. M. Selter, Mrs. Donna Hunter, Mrs. B. Young, Mrs. R. R. Wilde and Mrs. E. Brown. Girls of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church and Boy Scouts of the same church also helped during the afternoon.

Lovely Summer Wedding For Miss Margot Adam

One of the loveliest of early summer weddings took place last evening in St. Matthias Church when Margot Louise Adam was married to Mr. Gordon Watson Harris.

The strikingly beautiful bride is the daughter of Brigadier John S. Adam and Mrs. Adam of Crescent Road, and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Harris of Soames Point, Cranberry Landing.

Bestman was Mr. Charles H. Harris, the groom's brother and ushers were Mr. Thomas Amundale and Mr. Rocky Robertson.

Following the marriage ceremony, a reception was held in the officers' mess of the Canadian Scottish Regiment in the Bay Street Armoury. White flowers decorated the mess.

Lieut.-Col. C. M. Wightman proposed the toast to the bride. The bride and groom cut the wedding cake with Brigadier Adam's dirk.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her dark hair made a pretty contrast to the old-ivory shade of the French satin wedding gown, which had been her mother's. The fitted bodice had a square neck with scallops of old ivory lace skimming the waistline and elbows.

The slim skirt swept into a short train. Her cathedral veil of tulle had graduated frills starting at the waist. Her headpiece was three satin roses, and she carried an armful of tiny cream roses and stephanotis.

Miss Adam had six attendants, her sister, Mrs. K. Davidson as matron-of-honor, and Miss Shannon Fitzpatrick and Miss Pamela Watson as bridesmaids. Flower girls were Miss Heather Davidson, Miss Fiona Davidson and Miss Dana Harris.

Senior bridal attendants all wore sleeveless, floor-length dresses of blue and yellow flowered chiffon over green tulle, with matching head-dresses. They carried small white carnations. The little flowergirls wore floor-length frocks of white organdy. Empire style, with sashes of blue velvet. They wore coronets of white organdy and carried nosegays of white roses.

Doing The Town

with DOROTHY FRASER

Sweaters and skirts to live in . . .

After "doing" some of the new stores in Southern California during the past few weeks, it was a real pleasure to come home and visit Wilson's again . . . Truly, there's nowhere that can touch them for those "good" clothes we discriminating women appreciate so much . . . and which our American friends so gleefully carry home with them . . . New at Wilson's since our last visit are Scottish "Shetland" sweaters with Fair Isle patterned yokes, and dyed-to-match monotone tweed skirts . . . These latter are slightly A-line, panelled for slimming effect . . . and are beautifully made and finished . . . (If you want to see how a skirt should be finished, just look at the insides of these!) . . . Colors are green/brown, gold mix, Clyde blue and an earthy brown . . . $25 for sweaters, $26.50 for skirts . . . A new shipment of Ballantyne cashmere sweaters too . . . with slim, pure wool worsted skirts to match . . . Marigold, opera red, green and blue, and hot pink . . . all new shades this year . . . The nice dressy sweaters with ¾ length sleeves come in various interesting styles with gold button trim . . . One has a little collar, another a soft tie neck . . . another is a collarless classic . . . And here's something quite special this season . . . dyed-to-match wool yardage so you can make your own skirt or a sheath dress to team with a cardigan . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-1177.

Pick yourself a plum at M & E . . .

Maybe your mind's running more to summery clothes right now than duds for cooler fall days . . . but remember, summer is short . . . and we think you'd be real smart to pay a early visit to the Madam and Eve Shop if you'd like to pick up a plum in the form of a coat or suit . . . because M & E have some stunning coats and suits from England . . . traveller's samples . . . which they're selling quite inexpensively . . . More will be coming in later, but probably more expensive too . . . so if you can find one of these one-of-a-kind in your size, you're in luck! . . . These coats and suits are quite distinctive . . . beautifully tailored and detailed, with unexpected touches that spell chic . . . A very smart green coat fastens over on one side, without benefit of buttons . . . There's a lighter green with curved seam detailing and slightly flared skirt . . . A fitted coat with big important buttons . . . some lovely checks . . . We like the double-breasted green check suit with leather buttons, and a youthful suit with blue and plaid jacket . . . orange pleated skirt complete with pin . . . Several terrific pantsuits with longer jackets . . . warm enough to wear all through next winter without an overcoat . . . One gold, another red . . . These would be particularly good on a tall girl . . . Madam and Eve Shop, Trosser Alley, 383-1177.

Nothing spells summer more than a pair of crisp white gloves. Bone and Ivory are variations on this successful theme.

Conversation pieces at the Handloom . . .

We've never seen anything quite like the hand crafted, sterling silver jewellery which is the pride and joy of the Handloom right now . . . Designed and made by Willy Van Yperen and Wolfe Kleebe . . . B.C. jewellers of marvellous originality and exquisite craftsmanship . . . whose pieces are exclusive to Handloom here . . . There are pins and rings and cuff links . . . necklaces and earrings . . . in imaginative contemporary designs which we can't attempt to describe . . . you simply must see them for yourself . . . There's a most attractive ring set with smoky rose quartz . . . an intricate chain necklace whose pendant is set with coral and cultured pearls . . . a pin set with jade . . . No two pieces are alike, and each is a real conversation piece . . . Also new at Handloom, several of Mrs. Edith Landsdowne's terra cotta figurines of children . . . the most adorable things you ever saw! . . . They're like sketches in clay . . . a few lines bring out the most marvellous expressions, and the little oriental children with their pets and dolls are completely entrancing . . . Handloom has a big stock of Aran wool . . . both scoured and oiled . . . for those very popular Irish fisherfolk sweaters . . . Some new patterns too . . . one for a beautiful length coat in traditional Aran design . . . The Handloom, 15 Centennial Square, 382-1811.

To keep your household sponges fresh, simply soak them in cold salt water.

Forecasts of Fall . . .

Believe it or not, Munday's have just received their first shipment of new shoes for Fall . . . and if you want to know what's new in footwear for the autumn season . . . do go have a look at them, as we did this week . . . They're Caracass, the American shoes that fit so well under the arch, and are so long on style and elegance . . . A very pretty and dressy pump called "Rebel" comes in fine napped Venetia suede, with illusion heel and big silver metal buckle . . . dark green, dark red or brown . . . "Dickey" . . . an old favorite with a new look . . . is also an illusion-heel pump, perfect complement in tailored clothes . . . Comes in black patent, black or brown all with matching suede collar, and navy calf with peau de soie collar . . . There's an open-sided pump called "Wayne" . . . black kid with brown trimmed buckle, or brown with suede piping . . . illusion heel . . . "Mist" is a smart brown or black calf pump with two strips over the vamp . . . "Nicola" is a sling with lower heel and broader toe . . . open sides and flat bow . . . in black, brown or navy kid . . . "Emil" has a still lower heel, and flat kid buckle . . . black with brown trim, navy kid with red piping, black patent or brown kid with peau de soie trim . . . All are priced at $25.95 at . . . Munday's, 1288 Douglas St., 383-2211.

Paint radiators with same color as walls. They will blend in with the room.

Viva Venezia! . . .

We were completely dazzled when we went into Sydney Reynolds' Venetian Room last Monday and beheld the huge shipment of Venetian crystal just put on display . . . Not only is it the largest shipment in years, but Mr. Reynolds tells us it's the best stock of Venetian crystal he's ever had! . . . The whole room sparkles with light and color . . . and our own feeling is why bother with Murano when you can get all this right here on Government St. . . . and at prices often lower than you'd pay in Venice itself! . . . There are lots and lots of those intriguing lanterns . . . new and beautiful shapes and colors (very reasonably priced, too) . . . Liqueur sets heavily encrusted with gold leaf and raised enamel flowers . . . Ditto vases and jugs and bowls and powder boxes and bibelots of all kinds . . . Fascinating heavy crystal paper weights with flower patterns inside a source of delight . . . Hand-painted crystal ashtrays in many colors . . . Goblet-shaped, hand-painted "Churchill" vases . . . made especially for Sydney Reynolds . . . Lustres and candlesticks and other objects too numerous to mention . . . We asked some darling little Florentine furniture too . . . a small corner cabinet, little chest of drawers and dainty telephone cabinet . . . Sydney Reynolds Ltd., 501 Government St., 383-3551.

A touch of rouge and a bit of powder on the lobes helps subdue overly-large ears.

A new way to see the world . . .

We swear travelling gets better and better all the time! . . . This week Paulin's told us about a new P & O world cruise scheduled for September, 1968 . . . for which they are already receiving reservations . . . It's a brand new route whose list of port-of-call will leave you breathless! . . . The P & O luxury liner Arcadia leaves Vancouver Sept. 8, 1968, for San Francisco, Los Angeles, San Diego, Honolulu, Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki, Hong Kong, Manila, Sydney, Melbourne, Fremantle, Durban, Capetown, Rio de Janeiro, Dakar, Casa Blanca, Lisbon and Southampton . . . where it docks on Nov. 26 . . . At this point you can either fly back home, or spend the next two weeks visiting friends or touring Britain . . . then re-embark on Dec. 11 for LeHavre, Lisbon, Bermuda, Port Everglades, Nassau, Cristobal, Balboa, Acapulco Los Angeles San Francisco and back to Vancouver on Jan. 9, 1969 . . . This means you'll have a bang-up Christmas and New Year's at sea . . . and of course there are shore excursions at every port-of-call! . . . Doesn't this sound like a marvellous travel adventure? It's a brand new and very unusual routing which enables you to really see the world! . . . If this stirs your imagination, we advise you to see Paulin's NOW . . . George Paulin Travel Service, 1000 Government St., 383-9182.

Visit Saba's for choice wool fabrics

One of the principal items on the shopping lists of visitors to our fair city, so we're told, is fabrics . . . more especially imported woolsens . . . and Saba Bros. is the store in Victoria to find the cream of the crop . . . They've just received some beautiful Liberty printed wool fabrics from England . . . soft, sheer pure wools . . . completely uncreasable . . . in lovely color combinations and patterns ranging from small florals to contemporary designs and even-popular paisleys . . . Soft greens, blues, reds . . . a delectable murre combination . . . as well as neutral blends . . . This material, 36" wide and priced at just $7 a yard, is marvellous for dresses, dressing gowns and blouses to wear with plain suits . . . Also new is a Bill and Blin Bedford cord . . . pure wool, of course . . . 56" wide and $15.50 per yard . . . Comes in navy, pink, pale green and turquoise . . . makes up into handsome coats and suits . . . Saba's also have a good selection of pure wool tartans . . . traditional clan tartans as well as the four exciting new Canadian tartans . . . Centennial, Maple Leaf, Pacific and Dogwood . . . We might mention that all of Saba's Gulpure laces are greatly reduced in price right now ranging from $10.95 to $25 a yard . . . Saba Bros. Limited, 1130 Douglas St., 384-8541.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred W. Best, 661 Jones Terrace, announce the engagement of their daughter, Dorothy Pauline, to Mr. Arthur Raymond Provan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Provan, Burnaby, B.C. The wedding will take place at 2 p.m. on July 8 at the Church of St. Andrew, HMCS Naden. Rev. J. G. Titus will officiate. — (Jim Ryan)

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest E. Bartlett, 132 Olive Street, announce the forthcoming marriage of their only daughter, Laura Lee, to Mr. Peter Douglas Bray, elder son of Mr. Peter S. Bray, 1237 Bewdley, and the late Mrs. Bray. The wedding will take place on Saturday, July 1 at 7:30 p.m. in the Church of Our Lord.

Whitlow-Williams

Dean's Son Wed

Following their wedding this afternoon, newlyweds Mr. and Mrs. Simon Hugh Whitlow left on a honeymoon to Santa Barbara, Calif., and New York City.

The bride, the former June Anne Williams, chose a gown of peau de soie fashioned on empire lines and accented with French lace at the neckline. The full train swept back from the waistline. A matching headpiece held her self-made veil which misted softly to cathedral length. She carried a bouquet of pink roses and white stephanotis.

Christ Church Cathedral was decorated with baskets of pink and white peonies and gladioli for the service at which Rev. Brian Whitlow, the groom's father, officiated. The boys' choir sang during the ceremony and Mr. R. Proudman, organist, played the "Trumpet Voluntary" and the recessional, Saint-Saens Organ Symphony No. Three. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Williams, 2625 Fifth Street, and the groom is the son of Dean and Mrs. Brian Whitlow, 930 Burdett Avenue.

Mrs. Karen Archer was matron of honor for her sister, and the Misses Sherry Fahey and Hilary Whitlow, sister of the groom, were bridesmaids. The attendants wore long-sleeved gowns of pink tulle, accented in pink chiffon, with strands of pearls accenting the necklines. Matching ring headpieces, highlighted with bows and tulle, complemented the gowns. They carried bouquets of pink carnations and white stephanotis.

Hugh Shillings was best man and ushering guests were Tom Stockhill and Herb Sharp. At the reception following in McPherson Restaurant a three-tier wedding cake centred the head table. Alan Williams proposed the toast to his niece. For travelling, the new Mrs. Whitlow chose a light blue dress and coat ensemble. The newlyweds will make their home in Vancouver.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: I have been reading you for years and I thought I had heard everything, but I ran across a news item in the paper today that is more fantastic than anything I have ever read in your column.

Here in Santa Barbara a new place of business has opened. It is called The Psychedelic Shop. They sell accessories for smoking marijuana, pot pipes, "roach" (cigarette papers) and toys to amuse people while on LSD trips. They also offer paintings, jewelry and drawings by young artists and far-out phallic sculpture.

The police chief insists he cannot close the shop because there is no law against it. He also said, "We can't shut down a place of business just because some people don't like it."

As a courageous crusader who has always upheld high moral standards, will you please say something about authorities who hide behind the law to permit such an establishment to operate? — SANTA BARBARA CITIZEN

Dear Santa: I can't see that anybody is hiding behind anything. The police chief stated that he is unable to make an arrest because no law has been broken. If the shop sold marijuana or LSD the chief could and would padlock it at once, but selling accessories is not against the law.

Dear Ann Landers: Here is a belated thank you. Three years ago my wife sent for your booklet on alcoholism. She was no drinker but I was. That booklet lay on the dresser for three months and finally one night I decided to read it even though I was not ready to admit I had a drinking problem.

Reading your booklet was the first step toward ending a living hell. I recognized myself in those pages and finally had to admit I was an alcoholic. Here are a few things I don't have to worry about anymore:

- (1) My wife leaving me.
- (2) Excuses for being away from work.
- (3) Excuses for being too "sick" to go places.
- (4) What to say to bill

Teenager

Age of Noise Revolt Explained by Comic

By KITTE TURMELL

Are you having parent problems? Everybody does, sometimes.

Here are clues to their solution from Shelley Berman, well-known "thinking" comedian who remembers his teen years. "First, Kitten, let's talk about the segregation of parents and teenagers. I'm not sure whether parents are keeping teenagers out of their world or vice versa. I, for certain, don't find most teenagers out of line as some adults think."

"I don't think most parents, and adults, realize how much time young people have to spend just listening. They listen at school all day, and to counsellors and employers. Also I hope, at Sunday school or church."

"So how much listening can they do, without wanting to make a little noise themselves? This brings on what I call The Age of the Noise Rebellion. Some band together to be heard en masse because they find it so hard to make themselves heard as individuals. Others seek adults to listen to their views."

"There are several ways to get somebody of any age to listen," he said. "As an entertainer, to gain attention from an audience that doesn't feel like listening, I have found it is more effective to lower the voice, and do small things, than to talk loud and do big ones. It is better to attract interest quietly than to get into a shouting contest."

Inevitably, there are times when teen-parent discussions blow up in a temper. What then?

"Everyone has a right to blow his top once in a while," said Shelley. "The door-banging goes on around every house. But it's a good rule not to go to bed that night without trying to overcome the problem."

His recommendation: Say you are sorry, if you are, if not, say you are sorry there was an upset and you hope tomorrow you can talk things out and reach a happier conclusion.

Dating is a common ground for family disagreements. How can you lessen the friction?

"Make sure your dates have YOUR approval, to begin with," said Shelley, pointing out that the boy who breaks dates with others will probably do the same to you; that the boy whose friends you do not approve of may be like them underneath.

How can you gain freedom to choose friends, have more dates? Here are Shelley's suggestions, based on his philosophy, "If you want your parents to have confidence in you, earn it."

● Accept responsibilities, don't procrastinate. If you are the type to put off Monday's homework till after 10 p.m. on Sunday, you're not likely to get the everlasting trust of your parents in a hurry.

● Keep your promises. If you assure parents that you will do, or have done, something you were supposed to, and don't follow through, you are the loser.

● Remember, parents know some things you have yet to learn. "Every time you look at your parents and think how thoroughly stubborn they are, and how little they understand you, remember this," said Shelley: "Someday you will sit and look at a boy or girl in teens who will say to you 'Mom — or Dad — you are too old to understand.'"

LETTERS to Kitten

Dad Wants Son at Best

"Dear Kitten Turmell: When I was in the first or second grade, my father said I could wear my hair any way, I wanted, as long as I kept it neat and clean. A few months ago, I let my hair grow out."

"Now that summer is here, he's telling me I have to get it cut. (BURIED) Since I've wanted to get it cut, but he's always combed it and washed it once or twice a week. It isn't too long, either. I wear it a good inch above my eyebrows. I don't want to get it cut, but he's going to make me get it cut."

His recommendation: Say you are sorry, if you are, if not, say you are sorry there was an upset and you hope tomorrow you can talk things out and reach a happier conclusion.

Disc Price Varies Up, Down

By MARY LEE BURROWS

Great news! Stereo album prices are dropping but (it was too good to be true), mono prices are going up.

RCA is the only company which has made this change to date but it is probable that the other companies will follow suit.

One broadcasting chain in the U.S. has taken the initial step in controlling the lyrics in popular songs. The record companies are now required to supply printed lyrics with every song, or run the risk of not having it played.

The new Beatles album is selling number one in Victoria but the Monkees' new one, Headquarters, is also getting a lot of call. Headquarters is already worthy of a gold record.

Herman's Hermits have started filming their picture entitled Mrs. Brown You've Got a Lovely Daughter.

Hit singles: The survey is pretty straight forward this week. Business has picked up considerably.

Anne's Eye on Navy

LONDON (UPI)—The pay is by no means a royal sum but Prince Anne doesn't really care. She wants to go to sea with the Royal Navy.

Anne, 16, was reportedly planning to join the Women's Royal Naval Service as soon as her mother, Queen Elizabeth, gives her permission.

Royal court sources said this was unlikely until at least next summer.

like anyone else," one cautioned. "There is only one way to become a Wren officer and that is after serving in the ranks."

The court sources said the Queen would probably let Anne join the Wrens next summer after she finishes her studies at Benedict school for girls.

Anne inherits her love of the sea and sailing from her father, Prince Philip, and from a long line of seagoing monarchs. Sailing with her father and brother, Prince Charles, is one of her favorite pastimes.

"We cannot confirm or deny these reports," a Buckingham Palace spokesman said Saturday.

Enlisted pay for new Wrens is only $14 a week but Anne is said to have her heart set on going to sea. She will be 17 on Aug. 15.

Senior Wren officers said they would be "pleased, highly pleased," if Anne joined their service.

"But she would be treated

In Front: Blues By Five

The Blues By Five led the pack Saturday after the first round of the Centennial Battle at Memorial Arena.

The group had 334 of a possible 400 points.

Other scores: Imprints, 313; Fury, 281; Odds and Ends and Mixed Emotions, 297 (tied); City of Drawers, 270; The Seventh Edition, 266; Next of Kin, 255; Electric Train, 242; and Dirty Ballad, 207.

Ten more of the 43 teen-age bands in Victoria will compete in the second round of the "battle" next Saturday.

The top five from each round will compete in the finals, which will be held July 1 in Centennial Square.

The contests are sponsored by local 247 of the American Federation of Musicians and the Victoria Centennial Committee.

Will your child ever catch the Teacher's eye?

The B.C. Teachers' Federation is conducting a province-wide campaign to reduce the size of classes in B.C. schools in order better to educate YOUR children.

This year, in British Columbia there are 41 elementary classes with 40 or more pupils and 3080 elementary classes with 35 or more pupils.

For boys and girls to receive the maximum benefit from our revised educational system their classes should not be larger than 25 to 30 pupils.

Here is what Sir Ronald Gould, president of the World Confederation of Organizations of the Teaching Profession says about large classes:

"Put a teacher in front of a big group of children and the teacher can instruct or drill, he cannot educate. He cannot treat each child as an individual. Big classes mean bad methods. Big classes limit freedom to experiment. Big classes result in bad education."

Our Principals

All-Round Program Best

The best school program is the one that goes beyond the essential classroom subjects to include sports, music, drama and similar activities both within the school and between schools.

This has been the conviction of Donald G. Henderson, principal of Bank Street elementary school, ever since he enjoyed such a co-curricular program himself as a student at Victoria High — and, incidentally, was persuaded by his own enjoyment to take up teaching as a career.

Essential to such a program, says Mr. Henderson, is a teaching staff capable of achieving results — and he points to growing, successful participation by Victoria schools in sports meets, music and drama festivals as evidence that this district is fortunate in its teaching staff.

SASKATCHEWAN BORN

Born in Tuxford, Sask., Mr. Henderson came to Victoria with his family at the age of seven, living for a short time in Oak Bay before settling in Deep Cove. He attended the Deep Cove and old North Saanich Airport school before returning to the city for four years at Victoria High.

There he took part in that co-curricular program that was to determine his own course in life.

Graduating in 1947, he attended Victoria College on Lansdowne for two years, then normal school.

His first teaching post was Cobble Hill, where for a year he taught four grades in one of two rooms. Next came a year at Lillooet, teaching Grades 5 and 6 in an elementary-senior high school, followed by a year at Duncan elementary.

The following year, Mr. Henderson spent three years at what was first McDonald Park and is now James Bay school. Next came three years teaching at Willow.

The following year Mr. Henderson was acting supervisor of physical education for the district while George Grant was in England. This experience on the administrative end of school work he found tremendously stimulating and interesting.

For the next five years Mr. Henderson was vice-principal at Victoria West, then spent a year in the same capacity at Oaklands before being appointed principal at Bank Street last September.

Married, he has four daughters — two in Gordon Head Junior high and two in Gordon Head elementary. His hobbies include reading, fishing, boating, water-skiing and steelhead-fishing. — E.M.S.

Six Tons of Rock Awaiting Aid For Trip to Expo

A six-ton centennial project is waiting in Edmonton, seeking sponsors to supply transportation to Montreal. It is a granite rock blasted from a mountain near Rocky Mountain House, Alta., starting point of the centennial voyageurs canoe pageant. Knut Sunde and Bernard Killick of Alhambra, Alta., near Rocky Mountain House, are attempting to get the rock to Montreal to mark the spot where the canoeists land at Expo 67 at the end of their cross-Canada journey.

E. V. Bunnell, president of Northwest Industries Ltd. of Edmonton, says his company has plans to manufacture a new bush aircraft with an interchangeable undercarriage making it adaptable for use under varying conditions.

Police say the body of George L'Hirondelle, 57, of Guana, Alta., who was wanted in the June 6 wounding of his wife, was found in Lao Ste. Anne, 50 miles west of here. Police said L'Hirondelle apparently drowned.

A city hall spokesman said in Edmonton that Roger Beaudet of Montreal chose Edmonton when he won a trip to any city in Canada as Expo's 10,000,000 visitor. Mr. Beaudet and his family will arrive about July 21 to spend a week or more during the city's Klondike Days celebrations.

'Could Get Worse'

Shots Fired Over Loggers

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Shots were fired Friday over the heads of lumber company employees as they prepared log booms for a controversial Stelako River log drive, scheduled for Monday.

Joe Leslie, log superintendent for Fraser Lake Sawmills Ltd., said: "We have turned the matter over to the RCMP and have warned police that the situation could get worse."

The shots, which hit nobody, were fired from boats just offshore near the company's camp. A spokesman for the B.C. Forest Service said the shooting might have been by people opposed to the drive, which has angered conservationists and sport fishermen, who see the drive as a threat to salmon spawning areas along the river.

Mr. Leslie said logs had also been set adrift when boom chains were mysteriously released. Night watchmen have been assigned to the booms.

Resident Enraged By Pussy-Footers

By JIM BRAHAN
 Pussyfooting politicians and sewer-soaked taxpayers have angered one View Royal resident to the fighting point. "I'm completely fed up with the apathy of the local politicians and the taxpayers who shy away when faced with the sewer problem such as we have on this part of the Island," stormed L. J. Stephenson in an interview Saturday night. "This whole end of the Island is surrounded in a sea of sewage, and my own septic tank is more than likely contributing to it."

CANT USE LINE
 Mr. Stephenson said a sewer line runs past his house at 2815 Shoreline, but he can't use it. He explained the line will be used by the new Christie Point School, which was allowed to use Esquimalt trunks after much controversy with Esquimalt council.

"My kids have been sick periodically for the past 18 months, and a couple of days ago our family doctor recommended we move out of View Royal to help the children," he said.

NEIGHBORS
 Mr. Stephenson said he planned to talk with his neighbors on the street and see if they can make some arrangements to use the sewer. He termed the lengthening of the outfalls, now under study, as an "asinine" method of sewage disposal.

"They run it out to 1,200 feet

Two Planes Crash On Mainland

PITT MEADOWS (CP)—Jim Plummell's centennial project got off the ground allright Saturday but getting it back was a bit of a problem.

Mr. Plummell's home-built aircraft, which he planned to fly to Expo 67 in Montreal, crashed after 10 minutes in the air on its first test run. The 28-foot, single-engine craft was caught in a downdraft on a take-off from Pitt Meadows Airport. There were no injuries.

In another airplane mishap Saturday, four young officer cadets escaped with only minor injuries when their rented plane crashed in a construction yard in North Vancouver. The plane's undercarriage struck a dirt embankment, sending the craft to the ground.

The accident occurred near a private landing strip.

Exploring Comes at 90 —After Everything Else

She's not been a butcher, baker or candlestick maker, but during her 90 years, Miss Dorothea Mitchell, 1338 Harrison, has learned many other trades.

Keen and interested still, the Victoria author has a new experience coming up for her 90th birthday Wednesday.

Her friends, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Gibson, 2990 Rutland, will be taking her by car and boat to Wickaninnish at Long Beach, because she hasn't yet done much exploring up-Island.

The first unmarried woman to be granted a homestead in Ontario, Miss Mitchell came to Canada in 1904.

She worked first as assistant manager in a hotel and later as manager of a rooming house.

After a few years, her adventures took her to Silver Mountain, about 40 miles from Sudbury, as assistant to a mine manager.

When the mine closed, Miss Mitchell bought the general store. Then the post office. Then the mine agency. Then a sawmill, timber rights, railroad tie contracts and logging camps.

To provide a home for her mother and sister, Miss Mitchell took a homestead where she built a cabin for the family.

It took a lot of persistence to get the government to recognize her position as head of a family and eligible for the land.

In 1921, she left her homestead, and after taking a business course became an accountant, eventually owning her own real estate and accounting office.

Miss Mitchell has been busily retired in Victoria since 1944.

Garden Court

Hefty Coat-of-Arms On Way to City

A bronze Canadian coat-of-arms weighing about 3,000 pounds is on its way here from Vancouver to be installed in the Confederation Garden Court being built at Menzies and Belleville.

It is part of a $35,000 beautification project by the Capital Improvement District Commission. The Garden Court, which will be officially unveiled July 1, will complement the west side of the legislative buildings to balance the museum-archives complex on the east side.

The coat-of-arms was designed by Robert H. Savery, Victoria landscape artist.

It was sculptured in 14 separate segments, which were individually cast in bronze and welded together.

Finally, the shield, Union Jack and Fleur-de-lis were painted in colors with a special, imported enamel.

Dads' Day Dampened

The fastest turnout in the history of Colwood's volunteer fire department occurred shortly after midnight Saturday.

The 26 firemen were sitting down in the firehall to a Father's Day dinner given by their wives when an alarm sent them to a small brush fire on Wishart Road near Latorla. It was extinguished in record time.

Beatle McCartney Admits Taking LSD

LONDON (CP)—Beatle Paul McCartney Saturday admitted in a London newspaper interview that he has taken the hallucinatory drug LSD.

McCartney said he took the drug four times in the last year. He said he believed it made him "a better, more honest, more tolerant member of society, brought closer to God."

But, he added, "I am not, never have been, and never will be a drug addict." He said the last thing he wanted was for his fans to take LSD.

The paper quoted McCartney as saying: "No one needs to take LSD, not even the leaders of the world. But the need today is for people to come to their senses. And my point is that LSD can help them."

To Beautify Your Complexion

For sheer loveliness in complexion beauty there is one simple but important rule to follow. First you must remember that all the time moisture is evaporating from your surface skin and every time you wash you drain off valuable skin oils. The result is a gradual tendency for the skin to develop dry wrinkles. This loss of skin oil and moisture is so easy to stop. Ask your druggist for a little oil of Olay and every day and all day see that your complexion is well protected with a film of this tropical oil. It will check further wrinkles and do much to smooth away past damage. Don't forget the same plan to keep your neck and hands lovely as well.

Lake Cowichan

Centennial Centre Officially Opened

LAKE COWICHAN — The first centennial project to be approved by the federal and provincial governments was officially opened and dedicated in a brief ceremony Saturday afternoon.

Three years of hard work were climaxed with the opening of Lake Cowichan's new community centre, which cost more than $74,000.

L. J. Wallace, chairman of the B.C. centennial committee, performed the opening ceremony, unveiling a large plaque.

INSPIRATION
"Although you are not the first district to complete your project, because of its size, you have inspired other communities with your hard work," he told a large gathering.

Mr. Wallace said that by the end of 1967 a total of 2,300 projects would have been completed in Canada, 350 in B.C. alone.

They would cost more than $12,000,000, he said.

"You have done a splendid job with such a small population, and I'm sure the new centre will serve the community well," Mr. Wallace said.

Population, which comes under school district 66 (Lake Cowichan) is 5,568. The grant was $8,908 from the two governments.

Original cost was estimated at $85,000 but this was reduced by 11,000 hours being donated by more than 300 residents.

FUND RAISING
Local organizations and fund raising projects throughout the district raised the remainder.

The centre has a large auditorium on the second floor, a smaller hall on the ground floor. The building, equipped with kitchen facilities and washrooms, is painted white, but is not yet fully completed.

After the opening, Mr. Wallace presented centennial medals to 18 pioneers, two of which were awarded posthumously.

"Those of us who are benefiting from your work in building Canada thank you sincerely," he told the 16 recipients.

GANGES — Gulf Islanders threw out four separate referendums Saturday by decisive majorities.

They turned down:

● Plans to incorporate the unorganized territory of Ganges into a village.

● Adding an industrial arts building and three classrooms to Gulf Island high school in Ganges at a cost of $254,000.

● Purchasing an existing dormitory building at the school and extending it at a cost of $65,000.

● Building a teachers' residence on Pender Island at a cost of $17,000.

Average cost to residents with a $12,000 house would have been only $9 a year.

Chicago Drenched

Record June Rains Spill Rivers in U.S.

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Record June rains sent rivers spilling into cities and farms in Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri Saturday, Metropolitan Chicago was drying out from the month's second deluge.

An estimated million acres of Nebraska were under water. Hardest hit was Grand Island, Neb., where a third of the

Cuba Also

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — More than 1,000 persons were evacuated from Cuban lowlands and 325 houses were damaged by floods Friday after torrential rains battered the Gona area of Pinar del Rio province, Havana radio reported today.

Twenty-five houses collapsed and 50 more were inundated, said the broadcast monitored in Miami. No casualties were reported.

Residents of the city of 25,000 were forced from their homes by the rampaging Wood River. At least four deaths were blamed on the flood.

Grand Island's homeless were being sheltered in churches, schools, public buildings and hotels. They were being fed by civil defense workers, national guardsmen and the Salvation Army.

An estimated 11,000 homes and apartments were reported damaged.

Flooding on the Platte River forced 100 families from homes at Louisville, Neb., and in Missouri, the Missouri River flood crest was moving toward Boonville and Jefferson City, where it was due today. More than 1,000 workers, including 60 convicts, toiled along levees from Glasgow to Boonville. Thousands of Chicagoans spent Saturday pumping out flooded basements for the second time in a week. The city collected 1.71 inches of rain Friday night but 1.46 inches of it fell in 15 minutes, closing down the city's two commercial airports.

Flood Fighters Dare to Relax

Story, Photos
By Jim Ryan

ABBOTSFORD — It's all up to the weatherman now.

But civil defence flood-control officials here feel that for 1967, at least, they won't have to wage war against the rampaging waters of the muddy Fraser, Kootenay and Columbia rivers.

Had the fight begun, though, CD workers would have been ready and able to do battle.

FINGERS CROSSED

Crossed fingers are the order of the day, but all the signs point so far to a normal runoff of water.

Here in the flood-control "war room" — under the able direction of Art Fraser, civil defence co-ordinator for the Fraser Valley — preparations have long been in hand should the waters of the fast-moving Fraser River have erupted their banks and flooded low-lying land in the valley.

Preparations have been made to the minutest detail — even down to the last cup of warming coffee should CD workers have to be called out. A civil defence trailer — capable of producing 300 hot meals — stands at the ready at Abbotsford airport. At CD headquarters in the provincial government building, the entire basement has been converted into offices, including a well-equipped radio room.

GAUGE WATCHED

Here is the nerve-centre that would spring instantly into action should the automatic river-level gauge at Mission indicate danger. It is this gauge — encased in a concrete tower beside the debris-choked bank of the Fraser — that stands as a stark reminder of grim days past.

The normal river level for June and July is 18-30 feet.

The all-time high was registered in 1894 — at 25.75 feet. During the disastrous floods of 1948, the level stood at 23.75 feet.

Saturday it registered 21.1 feet — and receding.

The weather has been kind this year — little rain and slow runoff of water from melting snow in the mountains. CD co-ordinator Fraser pointed out an interesting fact — one that allows a four-day warning of flooding to come. It takes four days for a drop of water to reach Mission from headwaters at Prince George — a 96-hour breathing spell for flood-control workers.

PREVIEW

The Mission gauge — there is a second one at Hope — indicates the flow of water per second in cubic feet.

This week at CD headquarters here, provincial civil defence chief John Erb was on hand to assess the local situation with the Fraser Valley staff.

In the Kootenays, however, although the danger level appears to have passed, for some residents whose houses front on the Columbia River it's only a matter of looking out the front window for a preview of what might happen if a sudden hot spell pushed the river level out of balance.

For one youngster it all comes as a vast disappointment. From the front porch of his home, he surveyed the lapping waters in the front garden and muttered with disgust: "Aw, shucks. The water hasn't even filled the basement yet."

NORMAL PROCEDURE

On Wednesday, the level of the Columbia stood at 39.28 feet — a welcome drop of .18 inches in 24 hours. In 1948 — the year of the big flood — the river burst over its banks to a disastrous 45.28 feet.

But in Trail, if you live in a riverside house, it's the normal thing to clean out the basement each year and wait for the dirty water to seep in to a level of several feet. That's par for the course, when you live on the Columbia.

At Nelson, where the Kootenay Lake level was at a reasonable 14.03 feet mid-week, the only people who were a mite put out by lapping lake water were private pilots.

FINE FOR BOATS

The air-strip on reclaimed land at lakeside was perfect for landing — provided you were flying a float plane. The windsock on its striped pole stuck out of the water like a periscope.

Runoff Threat Fading

The snow on British Columbia's mountain slopes is melting rapidly and the flood potential on most rivers has been eliminated.

The conditions were reported Saturday by the B.C. Water Rights Branch in its final summary for the year of snowpack and runoff conditions.

Thick and dense layers of snow remain only at the mountain's higher elevations. A sustained hot spell could produce a rapid runoff on the Columbia River but the Fraser River's sources seem to have passed the crisis point.

Earlier this spring, there were fears that a rapid melting of the Fraser River's snowpacks would cause flooding on the Lower Mainland.

Bank History Likely

By HARRY YOUNG

Business Editor

Premier Bennett and the new Bank of British Columbia are out to make history.

In the short span of one month they are hoping to sell 3,000,000 shares at $25 each for a grand aggregate of $75,000,000.

If they do this, the bank will be the first in the world ever to start with such a big capital, and the first corporation of any kind to raise so much in its first financing.

Can it be done?

SECOND LOOK

Many people who said "no" a few weeks ago are taking a second look at the situation.

They were impressed by the response to Premier Bennett's fund launching from the sophisticated investment firms. They also "felt" a favorable response from normally anti-Bennett sources. They were also amazed by the apparent enthusiasm of the man in the street.

"I am going to tell you something," said one dealer. "People are going to buy these shares even in the minimum lots of $100 just for patriotic reasons. They think B.C. deserves a bank of its own, and they want to show they are willing to support it."

LETTERS OUT

This atmosphere developed before the new bank got out its 600,000 individual letters to every household in the province, enclosing an application for them to fill up.

Meanwhile the betting on the street is confined to the experts. Some of them are betting that the full 3,000,000 shares will not be sold by July 15, when the offering closes.

Some are betting that the 3,000,000 will be sold, but not before the deadline.

NO MORE

Others think that the 3,000,000 will be subscribed for in two or three weeks, and that the bank will be in the triumphant position of declaring it is no longer able to accept applications.

If the latter contingency arises then the shares of the Bank of B.C. would have a scarcity value and the price would go up in the secondary market.

On the other hand if the issue does not fill out, dealers believe there could be some difficulty holding the stock at its issue price.

NO DIVIDENDS YET

One dealer points out that the shares of the new bank are not the easiest thing to sell in Victoria where so many people depend on their investment income to keep going.

The new bank will certainly not be in a position to pay any dividend for three years and perhaps longer.

"The shares therefore are not an attraction, where income is required, but they fill the requirements of those looking for longer term growth," said the dealer.

Although Mr. Bennett himself is a supporter rather than a member of the new bank there is no doubt that the Premier's enthusiasm has rubbed off in many places. He will sell millions of dollars worth of shares on his political personality alone.

SHORT MONEY SHORT

Competition for money in Canada has grown so keen that one of the leading consumer acceptance companies is now willing to borrow money on as short as a three-day period.

The T. Eaton Acceptance Company has announced it will pay 5 per cent for money lent from three to 29 days.

Hitherto acceptance corporations have rarely been interested in anything less than 30 days money.

HEAVY INVENTORIES

The continued weakening of the Canadian bond market is said to be due to heavy dealer inventories arising out of a glut of new offerings during April and May.

Several of these corporations issues are now trading at 5 to 7 points below their issue prices.

"The situation is quite serious," said one local dealer, "even at present high yields interest in bond financing is at an extremely low level."

INITIAL DIVIDEND

He added however that while prices might slide further, the opportunities for purchasing long-term securities at extremely favorable prices should not be overlooked by the investor.

The automatic food vending and restaurant firm of Versa-food Ltd. is to pay its first dividend in July.

The Toronto-based company which supplies canteen facilities to hospitals and other institutions, and also holds the catering franchises in a number of buildings including the Toronto Dominion Bank giant skyscraper in Toronto, is paying 10 cents a share in respect of its 1966 earnings.

The company reports its net profit for 1967 to May 24 was $431,000, compared with $247,000 a year ago. Sales in the same period rose to $13,119,000 from $11,362,000.

CUT IN FIBRE PRICES

Competition in the man-made fibre business has grown so intense that Britain's major manufacturer, Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd., is cutting its prices of these staple fibre products immediately between 25 per cent and 10 per cent.

More than 60 varieties of ICI's terylene products are affected. They are used primarily in the textile industry as blends.

The move is believed to be a precursor of tariff reductions under the Kennedy Round.

FUND PRICES RISE

The assets of the Royal Trust Company's Classified Investment Funds for Pension Trusts rose by nearly $50,000,000 to $262,000,000 during 1966.

The six different funds are the largest of their type in Canada.

The unit prices and prospective yields of the funds were: Government Bond Fund $87.86 and 6.19 per cent.

Corporate Fixed Income Fund $91.37 and 6.70 per cent.

Canadian Common Stock Fund $142.22 and 5.25 per cent.

Foreign Common Stock Fund $141.36 and 1.75 per cent.

NHA Mortgage Fund $96.10 and 6.70 per cent.

Conventional Mortgage Fund $93.60 and 7.28 per cent.

H. E. Trenholme, general supervisor of the funds said the performance of the two common stock funds during the year compared favorably with the popular stock exchange averages, particularly in the case of the foreign fund.

Case History

Computer Cuts Legal Leg-Work

Delegates to the B.C. section of the Canadian Bar Association convention held in Victoria this past week were shown how computers are going to cut out a lot of the leg-work research in the legal fraternity.

An organization has been formed in Edmonton which is pouring information into a computer which eventually will give a complete service of Canadian case history and statute law to anyone who asks for it.

"It is a sort of memory bank," said one local lawyer, "You give the machine a description of your case or problems, and it produces the most applicable cases or other judgment details."

This is the kind of information which lawyers now collect from legal libraries and registry offices.

The Edmonton organization was established by Keith Latta, a lawyer in that city, and his computer has now a fairly good bank of information on income tax and motor vehicle cases.

He is proceeding to feed-in other case history and statute law data to complete the service.

The service has been exhibited at the Bar Convention, where a B.C. Tel TWX machine is installed.

The operator dials the Edmonton number, punches out the problem and in a few minutes' time the answer comes through.

"It is going to save a lot of leg work," said one lawyer, "but it is not every legal firm which would find enough work for a tel-ex machine in its own office."

He said that in New Westminster a number of legal firms were organizing a pool arrangement and that this seemed to be an effective method of utilizing the service.

'Uneconomic, Harmful'

Alaska Dam Discouraged

WASHINGTON (CP) — The U.S. Interior department has urged that the huge Rampart power dam proposed for Alaska be further postponed as noneconomic and harmful to North American water fowl.

Its recommendation to the U.S. Corps of Army Engineers, made public Friday by Interior Secretary Stewart Udall, is considered likely to gain general government support.

As alternatives for Alaska Udall outlined an Arctic development program including possible purchasing of power from British Columbia.

A five-year $50,000,000 mineral development program, along Canadian lines, also is proposed as well as better surface transport, more research and surveys and better fishing exploitation.

The study of Rampart on the Yukon River has been going on for eight years and the project would cost an estimated $1,222,000,000 or more. It would create a lake larger than Lake Erie straddling the Arctic Circle downstream from the Yukon Territory. Its hydro capacity would be more than 5,000,000 kilowatts at a cheap price.

Mr. Morriaroe attributed the heavy trading to rumors that the company was planning possible takeovers but would not elaborate.

But there would be nobody to use the power and Udall discouraged the idea that the power would tempt industry.

FIRST PRIORITY

The study gave first priority for major alternative sources of development to one with more Canadian involvement.

This would be diversion of Canadian Yukon headwaters to tidewater near the Alaska-Yukon-B.C. boundary — a project the Aluminum Co. of America studied in 1952.

Udall said Rampart would flood the lakes and marshes of the Yukon serving five per cent of the North American waterfowl populace. Canada and Mexico automatically would be involved as partners with the U.S. in the Migratory Birds Convention.

The study included a U.S. state department opinion that a dam blocking the Yukon in Alaska would invoke the 1871 Treaty of Washington guaranteeing free navigation for Canada.

Tight Money, Higher Rates May Shove House Costs Up

By JANE BECKER

Canadian Press Staff Writer

The prospect of tight money and higher interest rates loomed across Canada last week with the resulting possibility that houses, at least in crowded urban centres, may become even more expensive.

Yields on long-term government bonds, a prime indicator of general interest rates, reached 5.95 per cent June 15, just .05 per cent lower than their recent high of six per cent last August, and almost .50 per cent higher than on April 1.

Yields on treasury bills have also been climbing steadily during the last few weeks, from 4.43 per cent on 182-day bills June 1 to 4.59 per cent June 15.

BANK RATES RISE

Day-to-day Bank of Canada loans, which brought average interest rates of 4.25 per cent at May 31, were up by .10 per cent two weeks later.

In Toronto, mortgage lenders said they were increasing interest on some conventional first mortgages to eight per cent this month from the 7½ per cent which prevailed in May.

This makes it likely that the ceiling on interest rates for National Housing Act mortgages may be raised by at least ¼ per cent when Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. reviews it July 1.

NHA RATES PEGGED

NHA mortgage lending rates have been pegged to long-term government security yields since last November, being kept at a ceiling of 1½ per cent above the security yield.

With bond yields at about 5.48 per cent last April the NHA rate was lowered to seven per cent. Now mortgage companies are betting it could go to 7½ per cent next month.

To the person borrowing to build a house, a ¼ per cent rise in the interest rate adds $625 to the cost of a $17,000 mortgage amortized over 25 years.

BANKS MAY ACT

This added expense could push house prices beyond the $30,000 mark average through Metropolitan Toronto.

However there may be one long-term benefit from higher interest lending. The problem so far this year, for builders and buyers, has been an extreme shortage of mortgage money.

Builders say the higher rates may encourage the chartered banks, which were freed to go into the mortgage lending market by the new Bank Act in May to release more of their funds for this purpose.

CARTER REPORT

The week also saw the first formal meeting of provincial and federal politicians on the Carter Commission report on taxation.

The decision was to have senior officials make a crash study of what the report would mean to the provinces. Findings will be presented to another committee meeting in September.

Jeff D Captures $5,000 Feature

VANCOUVER (CP) — Kentucky-bred Jeff D Saturday won the $5,000 feature at Exhibition Park.

Jeff D, owned by Al Davis and trained by Cy Perkins, was in front from the starting gate. In winning the feature, the four-year-old bay colt equalled the track record of 1:34 2/5 set last year by Bright Monarch in the Sir Winston Churchill Memorial Stakes.

Jeff D won the mile and sixteenth by two lengths over R. J. Bennett's Flying Magic. Black Pool was third.

Westbury Road, which ran fourth, won the Lieutenant Governor's Handicap last year.

A crowd of 7,423 wagered $26,211.

First Race — $1,000, claiming, three-year-olds and up, 6 1/2 furlongs.

Also ran: Shazadara, Warway, Power To The Road, Count Five. Time 1:10.24.

Mighty Buckpasser Can't Solve Poker

NEW YORK (AP)—Poker led from the start and upset his stablemate, mighty Buckpasser, and Assagai Saturday in the 1 1/4-mile, $50,000-added Bowling Green Handicap on the grass at Aqueduct. Buckpasser not only had his debut on the grass ruined but also had his 15-race winning streak snapped. He was trying to equal the streak of 16 that Citation compiled 17 years ago.

David Arrellanes, 24, of Norwalk, Calif., while injured, also in hospitals at Victoria, were two young Ladysmith men, Christopher Windle and Hubertus Rla.—(Robin Clarke)

Lake Cowichan

Centennial Centre Officially Opened

LAKE COWICHAN — The first centennial project to be approved by the federal and provincial governments was officially opened and dedicated in a brief ceremony Saturday afternoon.

Three years of hard work were climaxed with the opening of Lake Cowichan's new community centre, which cost more than $74,000.

L. J. Wallace, chairman of the B.C. centennial committee, performed the opening ceremony, unveiling a large plaque.

INSPIRATION — "Although you are not the first district to complete your project, because of its size, you have inspired other communities with your hard work," he told a large gathering.

Mr. Wallace said that by the end of 1967 a total of 2,500 projects would have been completed in Canada, 350 in B.C. alone.

$12,000,000 They would cost more than $12,000,000, he said.

"You have done a splendid job with such a small population, and I'm sure the new centre will serve the community well," Mr. Wallace said.

Population, which comes under school district 68 (Lake Cowichan) is 5,300. The grant was $8,908 from the two governments.

Original cost was estimated at $85,000 but this was reduced by $11,000 hours being donated by more than 300 residents.

FUND RAISING — Local organizations and fund raising projects throughout the district raised the remainder.

The centre has a large auditorium on the second floor, a smaller hall on the ground floor. The building, equipped with kitchen facilities and washrooms, is painted white, but is not yet fully completed.

PIONEER MEDALS — After the opening, Mr. Wallace presented centennial medals to 18 pioneers, two of which were awarded posthumously.

"Those of us who are benefiting from your work in building Canada thank you sincerely," he told the 18 recipients.

Quamichan Tragedy

Man Dies as Boat Capsizes in Lake

DUNCAN — A 36-year-old Duncan man drowned Saturday night in Quamichan Lake after the speedboat he was travelling overturned.

No cause for the accident has been discovered by RCMP.

He was Daniel Raymond Cameron.

His brother, Ron, was in the transboat, which was towing a skier, Bob Griffiths.

Both men were picked up by a passing boat.

Cameron was not seen to surface. Nearly two hours later a Duncan skindiver Glen Mackie, recovered the body.

The accident happened about 100 yards from shore, in about 20 feet of water.

At press time, Cumberland RCMP officers were leaving for Duncan Island to investigate a report that a body had been washed up. No further details were available.

Water At Low Ebb

COURTENAY — The water level of the city reservoir has shown an improvement following this week's announcement of water restrictions.

City administrator Bill Moore said the level had dropped to as low as one foot before the restrictions were imposed.

Restrictions are still in effect. Meanwhile, four tenders have been received for phase 2 of the Courtenay-Cornwall water supply. They range from $199,312 to $263,360.

Students Play House

Dads, here's a worthwhile project you could get your son involved with for Father's day 1968—home construction. The Grade 12 construction class of the vocational training wing of Cowichan High School built this attractive cottage this year at the school. Value is about $600. It has recently been transferred to a site at Quamichan Lake. Admiring their handiwork are Mark Mellor, Eddie Renner, on roof, and Steve Jang.

MacMillan Bloedel Offering Debentures

VANCOUVER (CP)—A registration statement covering a proposed public offering of $40,000,000 (U.S.) in debentures has been filed with the United States Securities and Exchange Commission by MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.

The company said the issue would be non-refundable for 10 years and proceeds would be used, together with internally generated funds, for capital expenditures, including new equipment and improvement of existing facilities.

Lehman Bros., Lazard Freres and Co., Wool, Gundy and Co. Inc., and Greenfields and Co. Inc. will form an underwriting group of U.S. and Canadian investment banking firms which will make the offering, probably late next month.

North Cowichan Kills Sewer Plan

Islanders Veto Vote

GANGES — Gulf Islanders threw out four separate referendums Saturday by decisive majorities.

They turned down:

● Plans to incorporate the unorganized territory of Ganges into a village.

● Adding an industrial arts building and three classrooms to Gulf Island high school in Ganges at a cost of $254,000.

● Purchasing an existing elementary building at the school and extending it at a cost of $65,000.

● Building a teacherage on Pender Island at a cost of $17,000.

Average cost to residents with a $12,000 house would have been only $9 a year.

The only words School board chairman Lee Armstrong could describe the result as were, "It's horrible."

NORTH COWICHAN — The $465,000 sewer bylaw, described as vital by officials, was thrown out by voters Saturday night by a narrow margin.

Of the 775 residents in the area eligible to vote on the sewer plan, only 460 did so. The vote was: 230 residents in favor, 238 against, 15 votes rejected.

"This is a very serious setback," said North Cowichan Reeve Donald Morton dejectedly. "Buildings, subdivisions, homes and hospitals all are affected by this apathetic stand," he said.

He said it could have a detrimental effect on the general health standard of the district, which is on the outskirts of Duncan and takes in Gibbins Road, Sherman Road and Phillip Street. The proposed new $4,000,000 Cowichan general hospital would also miss out, he said.

Besides the hospital, 450 homes, 15 commercial establishments, and three schools will not be linked to a sewer system.

Besides the backing of the Duncan school board, the proposed system bylaw was supported by the local chamber of commerce, the hospital board and the agricultural society.

"It's a step backwards for the district," said Reeve Morton.

Two Saved From Blaze

TOFINO — Two men, Nelson Pettah of Tofino and an unidentified crewman, suffered burns Friday when fire broke out aboard the fishing vessel Kolaresa K. Friday. They were rescued by the Royal Canadian Navy and the Tofino lifeboat.

Gifts Showered On Tourist Pair

NANAIMO — Saturday was a day filled with surprises, gifts, and fun for two people chosen as tourists of the year, by the Jaycees.

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Thompson, 103 East 6th, Vancouver, were overwhelmed by $200 worth of gifts donated by Nanaimo merchants when they appeared at Harbor Park.

The good-natured couple had gone there from the B.C. Ferry ahead of Mr. Brett.

without knowing they had been chosen.

After a brief ceremony, they were taken to the Malaspina wharf, to present the bathtub trophy to the winner of a race to Galloway Point and back.

The two-vessel race was between Jaycee member Gordon Brett and Dick Bough-Allen.

Mr. Bough-Allen, captain of the Wellington centennial bathtub was almost a half harbor

Jamaica Post For Nanaimo Art Teacher

NANAIMO — Tom Cooke, art and drama teacher at Woodlands high school, has been notified that his October application to external aid office has been accepted.

The office is an organization which promotes development of countries of the Commonwealth.

"I think this is a marvelous opportunity for Canadians in any field to see interesting places while helping others less fortunate," said Mr. Cooke, aged about 30.

His appointment is as Art and Craft Teacher, in St. Joseph's Teachers' College, Jamaica.

Sister Understanding

He was surprised at the understanding of principal Sister Bartholemew, of the order of St. Francis. Sister Bartholemew had contacted Mr. Cooke, outlining his forthcoming duties.

She seemed almost apologetic when telling of the number of students Mr. Cooke would handle — 125, less than half of the number he teaches now.

He will go to Ottawa on

Aug. 17 for a briefing session, where he will meet other EAO teachers who will outline their experiences, both to him and 100 other teachers who are shipping out to similar posts.

The foundation pays the same salary Mr. Cooke would receive here, and in addition, pays for transportation of furniture and travelling and living expenses.

The appointment is for two years, with option of an extension.

Island Scene

Popular United Church minister of Ucluelet and Tofino, Rev. James Ware is leaving the district with his wife and family at the end of the month. He is going to Sault Ste. Marie, B.C. The Duncan gym club is donating $20 to the fund to send the Kuper Island Indian school drum and fife band to Expo 67 this summer, said member Pat Rogers. Jack Games is the Gulf Island Agricultural representative of the B.C. government. He lives at Vancouver Bay, Salt Spring. Swim Lessons Soon

In Duncan And City

It's the duty of every parent to see each child grow up as well equipped for life as is possible.

The ability to swim is one of the most important skills, and for the 15th successive year, The Colonist is organizing free swim classes in both Victoria and Duncan.

Veteran swim coach Margie Naysmith again will be in charge.

Mrs. Naysmith has taught swimming for more than 30 years, beginning at the "Y", where she taught Grade 5 swimmers along with Archie McKinnon.

She has taken charge of Victoria's would-be swimmers since The Colonist classes began.

Last year "in recognition of service to the community who would not normally expect nor receive such acknowledgment from the community" she was designated Victoria's Good Citizen of 1966.

Children between the ages of 6 and 14 may enroll for the class and take advantage of Mrs. Naysmith's services, simply by filling in a coupon. The classes are free, and will be held in Victoria at Elk

Lake on Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays for beginners, and Thursdays for advanced swimmers.

In Duncan classes will be held Fridays. Each child enrolled will receive one lesson and lecture every week for eight weeks.

Transportation is available at a cost of $2.75 for the eight return trips.

Vancouver Island Coach Lines buses will leave each morning from outside the North Ward school on Douglas Street near the Colonist building at 9:25 a.m., returning after classes.

Children who want to attend classes together must fill in their application forms and clip them together before sending them in.

Classes will start July 4.

Weekend Horse Show In Port Alberni

PORT ALBERNI—The Centennial Horse Show will be held here next weekend at the fair grounds.

Members of the Alberni Valley Riders club are preparing jumps and equipment, applying finishing touches of paint, and readying stalls in the horse barn. Mounts are getting the most attention they've received for some time.

Several members took horses to the field recently to test the automatic timer which is being used for the first time this year, under the direction of Stephen Walford.

Judging the many classes will be Bob Batty of Duncan, while Pat Allen of Nanaimo will act as both steward and announcer. Time clock recorder will be Don Doucette and Nancy Irg will be the judge's clerk.

Drill team practices have been held for the past two weeks under the direction of Mrs. V. Richmond, but it is not yet certain whether they will be able to put on a demonstration for the show.

Meanwhile, from Duncan,

To Beautify Your Complexion

For sheer loveliness in complexion beauty there is one simple but important rule to follow. First you must remember that all the time moisture is evaporating from your surface skin and every time you wash you drain off valuable skin oils. The result is a gradual tendency for the skin to develop dry wrinkles. This loss of skin oil and moisture is so easy to stop. Ask your druggist for a little oil of Olay and every day and all day see that your complexion is well protected with a film of this tropical oil. It will check further wrinkles and do much to smooth away past damage. Don't forget the same plan to keep your neck and hands lovely as well.

Man is drawn to the sea for many reasons: economic, scientific, aesthetic, and for just plain adventure. The sea was already old when man appeared, and yet it holds the challenge and the opportunity of the future.

Man's Last Frontier Beneath the Sea

By
MAURICE G. VAESSEN

The seas are mankind's last frontier on this planet. For ages, islanders that we are, we have treated the great waters as little more than hunting grounds for fishermen, highways for ships. Now we are awakening to see that invisible beneath the waves lies a vast, virgin territory every bit as challenging as outer space and infinitely more promising of economic reward.

While headlines focus on man's drive into space, daring new mariners are quietly probing the untouched vastness beneath the sea. And what they are learning may revolutionize our lives. These new mariners are men of courage, scientific vision and unswerving interest to work, play, even live beneath the sea, this planet's final frontier. The discoveries they make, and the new products they help develop will change our lives in dozens of major and minor ways. The unknown we cut may some day be valued as ocean stockyards which the new mariners hope to develop.

For, with such fantastic projects now in the offing, the new mariners are transforming our ocean frontier into a part of the known world as vital and productive as our forests and our farmlands.

Despite their importance to mankind, the earth sciences have traditionally lagged behind the laboratory sciences. Perhaps the most backward subdivision of the earth sciences has been the obscure subject of oceanography, in which an attempt is made to advance our understanding of one particular part of our environment, namely the large fraction of our globe that is covered with salt water. The ocean is basic to all life.

Through a thorough understanding of the ocean, followed by imaginative engineering, we can make available a vast food resource that automatically renews itself. In its natural state, acre per acre, the sea is producing about as much as the land, yet man is only taking about one per cent of his present food requirements from salt water environment. When we come to farm the oceans we can expect them to produce much greater quantities of desirable food substances, just as farming on land has greatly increased the production of grains and vegetables and meat. Through immensity and ungovernable power, he has made some forays beyond the tide marks.

The next step for man is to start gardening the sea, planting the young fry, weeding out bottom pests such as starfish that eat up vital food, and then reaping the fattened crop. The new age will begin: the age of aquaculture.

Of all the sea's possibilities for man's future, the greatest may be its promise of a significant increase in the world's food supply. Despite sea, however, has been indefensible. Only a few maritime countries have seemed to appreciate the wealth thus cast upon their beaches by the tons of thousands of tons.

Potash was originally obtained by thrifty Scotsmen by burning dried kelp. Some of these sea cornstalks were burned but more were spread upon the land as fertilizer. That seaweed possesses considerable food value has long been known, but now that whole populations are reduced to hunger it might be more widely recognized. While some European nations have far outstripped us in the use of seaweeds as food, only the Orient has shown any adequate appreciation of this vast food source.

Algae, the simplest form of plant life, are the ultimate food sources for marine animals. Algae have no true stems, roots, leaves or seeds, but all have chlorophyll and make food by photosynthesis. Their cells take in water and minerals directly. There are three main groups of seaweeds, namely, the green algae (Chlorophyta) which thrive on sunlit shores where fresh water seeps over rocks. Red algae (Rhodophyta) form scarlet crusts in tide pools, but they can also live as far down as 200 feet, drawing energy from the sun's blue and violet rays, which penetrate to that depth. Brown algae (Phaeophyta) are fitted for shores and far lower depths, where their pigments absorb sunlight readily and where their tough, leathery structure can withstand surf, sun, and tides.

Let us try to correct a misstatement of long standing. Webster defines a weed as "an unsightly, useless or injurious plant." Seaweeds, mislabeled, far from being unsightly, are quite as interesting as oaks or orchids. They are certainly not injurious, however bathers may be annoyed at beaches cluttered by September gales; and far from being useless, they furnish food and shelter to countless sea creatures. In short, drab and unimpressive as they are, they play an important role in Nature's vast economy.

The giant seaweed that fringes the Pacific coast from Canada to Chile as a crop which, once harvested by sea-going mowers and refined into chemicals, will be used to stabilize the head on a beer, ensure the viscosity of ice cream, put bigger bang in ammunition, fertilize corn fields and eventually, processed into flour for cooking.

At sea, as on land, the whole animal kingdom depends on the plant kingdom for food. Plants alone know how to capture the energy of sunlight and use it in making the sugars, starches and proteins that animals live on. The seaweeds of the shore play their part in this process, but in the total chain of sea life it is

The future of man's use of the sea resources lends itself to much imagination. Resulting technological advancements stimulated by the need for a larger food supply is approaching a point where yesterday's impractical harvesting of the sea is becoming a practical com-

In contrast with such triumphs upon land, the sea remains unconquered and perhaps unconquerable. What man gleams is largely natural and unchanged. He cannot alter the floating sargassum or the giant kelp or develop superior types of herring or great blue whales. And yet, baffled though he is by the sea's

STUART TOMPKINS STUDIES RUSSIA

By MARGARET WILLIAMS

Dr. Stuart Ramsay Tompkins was born on an Ontario farm in the small village of Lyn in the year 1886. During his early years he lived in Brockville and attended school there. It seemed a foregone conclusion that he would attend university—his Scottish grandfather, a farmer, had in his possession a Greek-Latin grammar and this, he thinks, may have had something to do with it, he must have inherited the genes from him.

He was ready for university at the age of 15, but was held back for two years, when he went to the university of Toronto. During his second year he left for reasons of health and came west to Calgary where he worked on ranches and saw some of the old west. When he was about 20 he made a trip to the Peace River country. At that time there were, probably, he thinks, only three families there, one at Grand Prairie and two at Spirit River.

Those were hard times, there seemed to be a perpetual depression and no one had any money. However, he went back to the university and at 23 graduated with a BA degree in Classics. At that age he had no thought of writing. "I would have had nothing to say," he says. "I was very immature." He firmly believes that it is better for students to get away for a time from universities, to knock around the world a bit and get a little sense pounded into them.

In his final year he contracted typhoid and nearly died but he received his degree on his record. On leaving university he spent a year tutoring a family in Quebec then once again he came west, working for a time as reporter on the Edmonton Bulletin until he joined the Alberta department of education where he remained until 1915.

Stuart Tompkins went overseas as an officer in the First World War and was at the battle of Vimy. His health was not robust and he was sent back to England and eventually to Canada. He returned to Edmonton where his family was living.

On the way back from Europe he met a chap from the geological survey named Macintosh Bell who told him about a military expedition to Siberia. Dr. Tompkins has in the past become interested in the Russian language and had a smattering of it. A most difficult language, he says, to learn by one's self, like butting one's head against a stone wall.

He was exceedingly interested in this expedition which hung fire for some time. He made application to join it and was accepted by the 280th Battalion. For several months he recruited for the expedition in Edmonton, finally joining the battalion at the Willows camp in Victoria in November 1918. The Armistice had been signed and Victoria was celebrating. He remembers that Christmas season with its balls and extravagant entertainments, the natural reaction after years of strain.

On Boxing Day the 280th Battalion sailed from the Outer Wharf on the Proteas, a Blue Funnel Line steamer which was later sunk in the Second World War. The first shipload had sailed several days before and there had been some trouble with the French-Canadian personnel who wanted to go home. His own outfit was all from the English speaking provinces.

The Proteas was a merchant ship and with her cargo of some 1,000 men she rolled and pitched in stormy seas. It was a rough crossing.

Those were troubled times in Russia, says Prof. Tompkins. It was the aftermath of the Revolution. The Czecho-Slovaks, with a legion recruited in Russia made up, for the

DR. STUART TOMPKINS . . . 80 years and still writing books.

"They knew absolutely nothing about the country and cared less."

In Vladivostok he did a tour of duty as mess officer, a job for which he was definitely not fitted, he says. Using this as a lever he obtained leave and went to China to visit his sister who was a missionary in Honan. He travelled by train across Manchuria to Harbin with a group of British officers who were on their way to Omsk. They had been recruited to train the Russian troops of Kolchak.

The following May, after seven months in Russia, Prof. Tompkins in the Slavonic and East European Review. He stayed in Moscow, where the archives were in great confusion. There was no room to house them and they were scattered throughout the city, some in private homes.

He could not have gone to Russia in a worse year. Stalin's dictatorship was at its height. A Georgian, not a Russian, he was absolutely ruthless, says Prof. Tompkins. He had hounded Trotsky out of the country and he was busily engaged in picking off the survivors of Lenin's supporters, literally hounding them to death on faded evidence.

The professor had a letter of introduction to a man in the foreign office and was told to go there. He was challenged by an armed guard. He never did see the man whom he was supposed to meet — he had probably been liquidated — but met instead a man named Vinogradov, now an ambassador in Paris, he thinks. He obtained permission to visit the archives and later it was arranged for him to go to Leningrad. He tried to get into the Lenin Library but didn't manage it. The Russian government will allow nothing to be published that is at all inimical to the Communist party. He was permitted to make tours and visit the Hermitage which houses the great art collection of Catherine the Great. He saw a collective farm but learned little.

The Russians show you, he says, but tell you nothing.

While teaching at the University of Oklahoma a book agent from Prentice-Hall told him they were publishing a series of books on various countries and asked him if he would like to do the one on Russia, and so it was arranged. He spent the next several summers in the Library of Congress doing research for the book which was published in 1940.

Professor Tompkins' second book, Let's Read About Alaska, was published in 1945. He had to know the Russian background to write intelligently about Alaska. He became interested while he was in the north and was of course eminently suited to deal with the Russian aspect of it.

For some time he had been most part, of Austrian prisoners, were asked by the Allies to remain in Russia and assured them they would secure their rear at Vladivostok. There were, ostensibly, huge arms dumps to be protected and for this reason President Wilson gave the go-ahead on this composite expedition. There were two Canadian battalions with the British section, Americans and Japanese. The French and Italians had merely token forces. The expedition was, primarily, to checkmate the Japanese, and their designs for taking over.

Tompkins remained in Vladivostok for six months. The men did nothing but mount guard in the city and engage in manoeuvres but that was when he learned to speak Russian. They started a Russian language class. The instructress was a beautiful girl, but this was not the reason Dr. Tompkins was the only one who stuck with the classes, he says.

This woman is now living in the United States and 30 years later Dr. Tompkins and his wife went to some trouble to look her up. To his amazement she flatly refused to see him. Mrs. Tompkins did see her and asked why on earth she would not see her husband and she said she had read his book (History of Russia) and did not like what he said about her country.

"There were never more ignorant people than the Canadians who went to Russia," recalls the professor.

returned to Canada on the old Empress of Japan. He helped his brother start a farm in the Peace River country above Fort St. John, then taught for some years in Lethbridge. His next move was to the Yukon Territory as superintendent of schools. He and his wife, Edna, whom he had married in Edmonton in 1915, spent four wonderful years in Dawson City. There is a saying up there: "If you stay five years you've missed too many boats," but the Tompkins enjoyed all of it.

They made two trips down the Yukon, 1,200 miles, in a poling boat. It was summer and they camped along the way, taking no tent and as few supplies as possible. There was no night, just 24 hours of daylight, and they made the most of it.

On leaving the Yukon Dr. Tompkins went down to Stanford University but after one quarter he left for the University of Chicago from which he graduated in 1931 with a PhD degree in history. His next move was to the University of Oklahoma where he taught Russian history among other things. He was, he says rather sadly, "just one generation too soon." People in those days were not interested in Russia.

In the summer of 1937 he again travelled to Russia to do work in the archives. He was searching for further material on Count Witte, about whom he had published an article in the Journal of Modern History in 1932 and a second in 1935

Bill Sweet, by times handlogger, timber cruiser, prospector, buyer of fur in winter and salmon in summer, sat in his cabin in the little British Columbia coastal village of Thompson's Cove on a September afternoon in 1920, reading a letter he had a few minutes before brought from the post office on the hill a quarter mile from his home on the beach. His occupations had made him more familiar with the region for hundreds of miles around than any other man in the country, not excepting the Indians. It was for this ability, and because he was a thorough woodsman, and a man of cool head, that the letter he now read had been sent to him from his old friend, Jack Maclean.

DEAD MEN'S PADDLES

By FRANCIS DICKIE

Like many unattached young northmen, Bill Sweet had answered to the call of the First World War, served as sniper. Then, one day in London, while on leave, he met Major Maclean, boyhood companion in the little village of Thompson's Cove.

They had gone to lunch together, momentarily forgetting the war. Bill Sweet recalled old Mortimer Alexander, the weatherman, and his little rain gauge outside his house back on the hill beyond the post office. And how Bill and Jack, during the hot dry spell of summer had poured water in it, so that old Mortimer had reported three inches of rain, and been roundly laughed at by all the community.

Then Maclean came back with a boyhood reminiscence of their canny trip to the little dot of trees and rock known as Verney Island, lying in Choked Passage, some three miles from Thompson's Cove. Here, in a natural cavern in the steep rock face, the Eagle Clan of the Tsimshian people for many years buried their dead. The rock contained certain preserving chemicals; these dissolved and washed out by the rain, had dropped down upon the corpses gathered there in their cedar bark wrappings. In time the corpses had become petrified.

The graveyard in the cavern was no secret. So the boys, after viewing the mummies on several visits, had been filled with a wild scheme to steal the best preserved one and carry it home, and to hide it in the cellar of Bill Maclean's more commodious home until such time as they might find a buyer. Just who would buy it, they had been a little uncertain; but boylike, first decided upon procuring the goods.

Sitting there in the quiet corner of the little London Cafe, both thrilled again and re-lived the horror of that night of 18 years before, when they crossed in their rowboat the three miles from Thompson's Cove to Verney Island and stole the mummy. With grimaces they recalled the awful row that followed. Some of the Tsimshians missed their dead, just how the boys never learned, but they were found out, and the body returned.

As an upshot of this London meeting, Major Maclean talked of the superiority of the air service. This is a peculiarity of airman. Doubtless, from always soaring so high, they look down on all the rest of army service. Bill Sweet had come back to Thompson's Cove and resumed his old life. He had lost track of the Major.

Now, on this September afternoon of 1920, came this letter postmarked Vancouver. The Major was now in charge of a few planes, doing commercial flying. He was in need of pilots, coolheaded men, particularly like Bill with a thorough knowledge of the coast. And would Bill come right away and learn to fly? When granted a licence he would cover a section of the north with which he was most familiar. The salary was good.

Bill decided to accept, for here was a new form of exciting adventure.

As Bill finished the letter, there came a tap at his door. Entered Giamtwa, an old Tsimshian chieftain, the last of his line. A unique friendship existed between these two, though different in age and race. Giamtwa was a frequent visitor to Bill's whitewashed home by the sea; Bill, in his spare time, went often to Giamtwa's gaunt home on Rose Island near the village.

The old man dropped into his accustomed seat on the battered old sofa beside the window looking seaward.

Bill related the contents of the major's letter, then, told Giamtwa of the meeting with the major in London. This recollection brought him back to his boyhood days.

"Do you remember, Giamtwa, that time Maclean and I robbed the grave of the Eagle Clan over on Verney Island?"

He knew Giamtwa had long forgiven this act of boyhood.

Giamtwa nodded. "Verney Island is a place of strange happenings," he said. "Did I ever tell you about Luigahaid getting marooned there and how he finally got off?"

Bill shook his head.

"It was in Luigwa, the season of the oolichan; on the white man's calendar the latter part of March," Giamtwa went on in the Indian tongue. "All the village went away in their canoes to their own fishing grounds, for you know the oolichan is the most valuable of fish, and it runs only about two weeks, during which the people must get not only enough to salt down and smoke, but also enough to provide oil for all the coming year. As you know, oolichan oil is to the Indian what butter is to the white man. Well, all the people of the village went away together, excepting Luigahaid, whose canoe needed repairing. Luigahaid was a young unmarried man, not quite right in his head; what you call among white men simpleminded. Hence his Indian name, Luigahaid, meaning "too many inside;" that is, his thoughts were addled.

"He did not like being left behind in the deserted village. But it was not until the day after everybody was gone that his canoe was ready. It was late in the afternoon and the sea was growing rough. Yet as anxious was he to go to his people, he put out to sea rather than spend another night in the empty village. Quickly, the sea grew rougher, the wind stronger, blowing him toward Verney Island. Paddle as he would, he was driven finally upon the rocks at the western end. His canoe was smashed to pieces. He was badly battered and torn about the legs and hands before he got free of the waves' grip on the slippery and jagged stretch of rocks which mark the western end.

"Worst of all was the fact that he had been thrown on Verney where sleep the dead of the Eagle clan.

None of my people care to be caught at night at Verney, and now
Lulgalhaeld faced an indefinite stay.
Of course, he at once made his way to the opposite end of the island, to be as far away as possible from the grave-cavern. In the morning he got some clams at low tide.

"For a week he lived this way, but as every new day went by his horror grew greater, for at night he heard strange wallings, such as come only from the throats of dead people who walk amid the gloom of night. Then, on the seventh night of his stay, he saw, on a level stretch of beach which faces toward Thompson's Cove, five ghostly shapes. Long they stood gazing toward their former home, uttering still wallings, that had in them something of reproach, as if they were all angry at some one in the village for some misdeed or neglect of the dead.

Then the five ghostly shapes came walking toward where Lulgalhaeld lay trembling.

Coming opposite him, they all stopped and pointed at him with bony fingers. A moment they stood thus, then broke into a fantastic dance, a mincing minuet most awe-inspiring. And all the while five bony fingers kept pointing at the crouching, terror-stricken castaway.

Perhaps five minutes the dance lasted, then the dead men slowly went away, still with mincing movement and slow; as they went they slowly moved their fingers from Lulgalhaeld till they pointed over the water to the village.

"Of course, Lulgalhaeld took this for a warning to go away quickly from Verney Island. But how to do it — that was the question. The next morning he went along the beach pondering.

Then, as he walked, he came upon a big fir log, still awash, which the high tide was bringing in and would presently leave stranded upon the shore. The log was about 12 feet long and about two feet through. The sight of it gave to the castaway just the idea he needed. He now recalled the dead of the Eagle clan, were placed some paddles. Summing up all his courage and much aided by the bright sunlight, he went to the cavern and stole one of these paddles. With it he hurried back to the fir log, got astraddle, and began paddling toward the mainland, half a mile away on the other side of Choked Passage, for, as you know, Bill, the mainland is closer there by a good two miles and a half to the island.

So, for all Lulgalhaeld had little head, he knew enough to paddle toward the mainland in that direction rather than to come across the bay the longer way to the village. It was terrible work moving his heavy and rolling craft, yet at last, when

... teller of tales

he was almost exhausted, he made the mainland, and then walked the nine miles around the bay to the village.

"If it hadn't been for that log he might have starved to death or perhaps died from fright there on Verney Island," Giamtkwa concluded.

When the old man was done Bill told of his departure to learn to fly.

Two weeks later Bill sailed on the steamer Chelohsin for Vancouver.

It was late in the afternoon of Sept. 22, 1922, that Bill, in seaplane
No. 2, landed in the harbor of Prince Rupert from Vancouver. On the following day he again took the air and went whirling northward toward Wales Island, near where the Canadian boundary line gives way to American territory.

It was near sundown when he turned the seaplane homeward. With that rapidity common to the northern region, the fog bank suddenly began rolling over the face of the sea. From the mouth of the Nass, in both directions, its long bottle line of chill white came on; ocean and land beneath the seaplane lost in thick, cold fleece.

Homeward speeding like a great bird glad the day is done, the seaplane went. Then, suddenly the engine ceased to roar. He sent the machine downward toward the surface of the sea in a long glide.
Through the white wool of the fog he saw. The world became limited to the space of a hand's breadth before him, so dense was the opaqueness of the chill mantle. Presently he drifted in a fog-sown sea, now growing rough.

The disabled seaplane floated like a great wounded bird. Presently there came to Bill's ears the ominous smash of waves on rocky shoreline. The seaplane tilted sharply. Yet so thick was the fog that two more driving waves shot the seaplane higher, crumpling the floats on the rocks before Bill saw them. Leaping clear of the plane, and swept by the incoming waves in the shallows, immersed to the waist, he scrambled up the rocky shoreline.
He judged it was near high tide mark, because he had managed uninjured here to make a landing.

The fog turned the dusk to darker hue. He groped together some driftwood lying thickly about, built a fire, settled down philosophically to await the light of morning and the clearing of the fog.

Day broke. Before the sun and slight breeze the fog lessened, leaving the land clear, though still cleaving to the ocean.

Like a veteran of the wilderness, Bill slept. It was six o'clock when he got to his feet and ran slowly up and down to free himself of stiffness and chill. Even in that first little viewing there was something oddly familiar about the place. He began wider exploration. Fifteen minutes of this and he came to a dead stop before a curious cleft in a great rock rising sheer from the beach.

Moved by strange wonder at the queer tricks of fate, he stood staring at the rock. Four years of war, and two years now of flying, had taught him that happenings in real life are far stranger than anything man could imagine in the realms of possibility. Yet he was strangely taken aback by the knowledge that he was stranded on Verney Island, a knowledge brought by the cleft rock before him. Through it a passage led to a pathway up the face of another wall of rock farther back, and in this, high up, was the grave-cavern of the dead Tsimshians of the Eagle clan.

BILL SWEET
... crashed on Verney Island.

Bill knew Verney Island well.
Many a time he had visited it as a boy, before the carrying off of the mummy. It was a mile in circumference and thickly forested with fir and hemlock from the very water's edge. It had no human inhabitants and it might be months before a boat touched on it or came within bailing distance. Across the water, only three miles off, stood the village, the home of his boyhood and part of his manhood. His own white-washed house stood there, just as he had left it, and, almost within sight of it he might starve to death. He smiled at the irony of the situation.

Then, in the next instant, came remembrance of Giamtkwa's story of how Lulgalhaeld had made his way across the narrower passage.
He might cross that way too? He would try it. All he needed was a log — and a paddle. And there were always paddles buried with the dead
Indian hunters in the cavern!

Up the steep way, Bill climbed tossomely, a queer, uncanny feeling settling over him at thus going over this weird route for the second time in a lifetime. It seemed only yesterday, yet 30 years had passed!

And in the cavern — there were the same white figures of the dead; also many paddles. Selecting two for safety, he hurried out of the damp and depressing place.

Remembering how the half-witted
Indian boy had, after many days, finally thought out his method of escape from the seldom visited island, Bill began searching along the beach.

He found a light cedar log.
Fortunately, it was on the beach facing Choked Passage. Imbedded in the sand, it required an hour of hard labor to clear it and pry to the water.

By the time he was ready to set forth, the September sun was shining warmly, the fog cleared before a light breeze. Out into Choked Passage he pushed his clumsy craft as Lulgalhaeld had done years before. Tide and wind aiding his hard paddling he made the mainland by four o'clock.

He set out on the nine miles walk around the bay. It was growing dusk when Giamtkwa opened the door to his knock, and fed him, and then listened to the strange coincidence of the second log to put off from Verney Island.

Kitwancool Drums Throbbed A War Dance

If you happen to be idling around Thunderbird Park spare a moment to take in the Kitwancool totem pole on the east side facing Douglas Street. It's a duplicate of the original, carved about eight years ago by the late Mungo Martin. In fact he made two; one stayed here, one went back to Kitwancool village and the original went over to UBC. If you are hazy about Kitwancool, it's on a tributary of the Skeena, not far from Hazelton. Only in recent years have you been able to reach it by road, from Kitwanga. Two clans make up the village, the Wolves and the Frogs, a group with a history of being highly independent. They have never entered into any treaty with whites, and claim for their hunting grounds a territory about as big as France.

Another B.C. Police Adventure By CECIL CLARK

Now lets talk about the pole. The bottom figure is a woman holding a child, her left hand on its head. She is Will-a-daugh, who once formed a mesalliance with a character she met in the bush, who turned out to be a termite in disguise. In due course she gave birth to a baby which, though to all appearances normal, had an unfortunate habit of changing into a grub at night and burrowing underground to chew up the woodwork of adjoining cabins.

Eventually the villagers laid in wait for the destructive intruder, attacked it and as it withdrew to its own abode, followed it up. Finally, before the borer could change back into a child, they killed it.

It was in her distraction that the mother then went down to the seashore (when the tribe lived at what is now Prince Rupert) to vent a fervent wish that the earth be covered by water and the villagers drowned. By some misjudgement, though the waters rose, the only one drowned was Will-a-daugh. The inundation caused the chiefs (two because of two clans, the Wolf and Frog) to go into a huddle, with the result that the whole band moved to the Naas River.

It was there that, later on, a man who suspected his wife of some hanky panky, was out hunting when he heard a ground hog crying "hea-uk, hea-uk", which, if you know groundhog language, means: "She's at it again."

He hared back to the village, and reaching it at dusk, broke in on his wife. Sure enough she was in bed with a stranger, whom he promptly killed. Then, looking round, he noticed the strange's robe, richly adorned with ermine skins. Immediately he recognized that the intruder was the Prince of all Wolves who had impersonated a human.

Late that night the villagers heard a voice wailling from the sky: "Give me back my son." The murdered man's mother was flying round in the darkness in the guise of a giant woodpecker. So they tossed the ermine trimmed robe up on a roof to placate her. Apparently it didn't work: she wanted her son. So she called down a curse on the tribe, and rain fell for weeks. It rained so hard the village was in danger of being washed away. Again the chiefs talked it over, and on their decision the group moved over the Skeena watershed to Kitwancool.

If you study the totem pole, you will see a row of six tiny figures above Will-a-daugh's head. These are children fishing through the ice. Above them, with the big beak, is Skim-elm, the mountain eagle. Above him another row of children. One of them, on the extreme left, is a sort of village idiot, but their significance I haven't so far probed. However, on the very top is the giant woodpecker (Wee-get-weitku), the woman who wanted her son back.

If you imagine this mythology is a bit far out, here are a few Kitwancool facts that are equally fascinating.

For it was around the domain of the Kitwancools, and I'm speaking now of about 80 years ago, that a set of crazy circumstances nearly touched off the biggest Indian war in B.C. history.

This was the time, when tribesmen gathered to do a little potlatching, that they also helped the spread of measles and nearly decimated the infant population.

A Kitzeguecha woman (whose Indian name meant Sunbeam), who happened to be married to one Kamalmuk, a Kitwancool chief, got a fixation in her mind that her two small sons had died not of measles but by a spell cast on them by witch doctor Neetuh.

She nagged her husband to even the score, and finally in exasperation he did just that. He shot Neetuh. Visiting Kitzeguechas then picked up their traps and moved out, swearing vengeance. Which was the moment that itinerant preacher, the Rev. W. H. Pierce appeared on the scene. He smoothed down the trouble, and tried to prevail on Kamalmuk to go into Hazelton and give himself up to the police. A week or so later Pierce was retelling the story to the magistrate at Hazelton, and as a result, a couple of provincial policemen, Bill Washburne and Franklin Green headed for Kitwancool to bring in Kamalmuk.

When they entered Kamalmuk's cabin, instead of being penitent he had the ill grace to pull a gun, then slipped out the back door. Washburne went after him while his partner ran out the front door and round to the back. There for a second or two he glimpsed the fleeing figure of Kamalmuk, as Washburne aimed his gun to the sky and fired a warning shot. As Kamalmuk didn't stop, Green knelt and lined him in the sight of his Winchester to, as he said later, "wound him."

Unfortunately the slug caught Kamalmuk between the shoulder blades and his troubles were over. For the two policemen, on the other hand, they were just beginning. Scores of armed tribesmen promptly ganged up on the law. Fortunately the two were lucky enough to disengage themselves from a nasty situation. When they filed this report at Hazelton, it went forward to Victoria coupled with a suggestion that some help was needed.

Head of the B.C. Provincial Police in those days was Supt. H. B. Roycraft, a bearded Englishman who was not only the best judge of sherry in the province, but a man of considerable experience in the north country. Four years before he and one constable had faced an armed Indian mob of 300 at Hazelton, when he not only arrested an Indian chief for the murder of storekeeper Youmans, but in addition talked the Indians out of retaliation. Then just to make sure that his suggestion would be obeyed, he disarmed the whole bunch. After which he brought his prisoner all the way down to Skeena and down the coast to Victoria.

So it can be imagined that Mr. Roycraft had some harsh words for the trigger-happy Green who had set the northland ablaze, causing the entire white population to crowd into the Hudson's Bay stockade for mutual safety.

The superintendent talked it over with the attorney-general who thought the situation serious enough to call on the armed forces. The wheels were set in motion and in a day or two 50 men of "C" Battery, Royal Garrison Artillery, were marching along the road to Esquimalt with their band playing The Girl I Left Behind Me.

Every man carried a 30-pound pack, a Martini-Henry .45 calibre rifle, a bush knife, and a bandolier holding 40 rounds of ammunition. At Esquimalt they boarded the brand new corvette HMS Caroline, and were off to the Skeena war. Ahead of them, as supply ship was the Barbara Boscowitz, carrying 10 tons of grub, and 15,000 rounds of ammunition — and Supt. Roycraft.

On the side the police chief figured that at the Skeena River mouth tribesmen would be chary of replying out canoes for fear of reprisals. So when the Boscowitz stopped at Alert Bay he picked up six big Indian canoes.

Eventually the expedition reached Metlakatla, where the troops went ashore and set up camp.

It seems that Roycraft still had his reservations about the force to be employed, for a day later he had a conference with Col. Homes of the Artillery, and Sir William Wiseman, captain of the Caroline. He suggested that if he just took a few policemen up the river and talked to the tribesmen, it might save a lot of trouble, maybe a few lives.

It would be a neat trick if he could do it, for it entailed a back-breaking upstream struggle for 160 miles, that would take about eight or nine days. The plan got agreement, and Roycraft took off with 12 provincial policemen and in due course arrived at the confluence of the Bulkley and the Skeena. There, by prior arrangement, he met Magistrate Napoleon Fitzstubs. Fitzstubs had been 20 years in the police so he and Roycraft spoke the same language.

But now, to his irritation, Roycraft heard of further complications. Apparently that little ray of sunshine, Kamalmuk's wife Sunbeam had gone back to her own tribe, the Kitquenas, after the death of her husband. A day or two after her arrival, while she was loitering around the south bank of the Skeena she noticed a couple of Kitwanoos hovering on the opposite shore. Apparently there was only one thing to do, and she did it. She picked up a rifle and whanged a couple of shots at them.

Unfortunately, near to her at the time, an important Kitquena witch doctor was practicing a new bit of ritual. So upset was he by the shooting that he grabbed his gun and in retaliation chased Sunbeam's father into his cabin. Not only chased him, but pumped a few shots through the front door. One of the shots killed the old man.

Retaliation successfully affected, Tobuski, for that was his name, went back to the riverbank and said in effect to Sunbeam: "You annoyed me with your shouting, so I took it out on your old man, and I've just killed him. Now, if you want to shoot me — go ahead." With which he bared his chest and spread out his arms. For sheer dramatics the northern tribesman were hard to beat.

Though Sunbeam didn't take him up, someone else did. Seems that Sunbeam's father just happened to be the brother of a Kitquena chief named Morikin who, hearing of his brother's death, took after the witch doctor and succeeded in inflicting a bullet wound. After which he told an Indian Billy Gamble to hike into Hazelton and tell the police that a wounded murderer awaited their disposition.

Before the police arrived, however, Tobuski died. Morikin met the police and gave himself up.

All of which meant that, Fitzstubs and Roycraft, each commissioned as a justice of the peace, were in for a busy little legal session.

First they exhumed the body of Kamalmuk, killer of medicine man Neetuh, killed in turn by Const. Green.

Trouble with a lot of B.C.'s frontier day tribunals was scarcity of population; in other words, lack of enough qualified males to form a jury. Roycraft neatly sidestepped this by handing letters of dismissal to six of his policemen; then promptly swore them in as jurymen for the inquest on Kamalmuk. Thus the curious spectacle of six policemen, after due deliberation, declaring that Const. Green was guilty of murder.

Came next the inquest on medicine man Tobuski, which the jury held to be justifiable homicide and Morikin was turned loose. The jury was guided in its verdict by evidence of Morikin's peaceable nature, and seven bullet holes in the door of the shack where Sunbeam's father took refuge.

Came next a grand pow wow with the tribesmen (13 chiefs were present) when Fitzstubs and Roycraft alternated in giving, in tribal language, a rundown on the niceties of the white man's law. One by one the chiefs expressed their repentance and said they would spread the word and there would be no more trouble.

After which Mr. Roycraft re-appointed six policemen to the strength (without loss of pay or seniority) and with prisoner Green, the party moved down river.

At Metlakatla they found HMS Caroline had returned to Esquimalt, and the war being off, C Battery struck tents and boarded the Barbara Boscowitz. Still in the hold, untouched, was 18,000 rounds of ammunition.

Final chapter of the Skeena "war" was enacted in a Nanaimo assize court that November when ex-Const. Green was tried.

A jury of Nanaimo miners and tradesmen listened with rapt attention to the incredible story of blood fests on the Skeena, of witch doctors dead and alive, and a northern Lady McBeth called Sunbeam. It was all too much for them and they acquitted Green.

I hate to think what would have happened if some witness had ventured to tell them of the woman who gave birth to a termite, and the groundhog who snatched on the cheating wife. They would have rushed to the "Old Flag" to recuperate.

Luckily here in town we have a reminder of some of these wild doings — the tribal record in Thunderbird Park.

Stuart Tompkins Studies Russia

thinking of a book on the development of the Russian mind and in 1933 his book The Russian Mind was published. He started with Peter the Great, who, it has been said, "opened the windows onto Europe."

His fourth book, The Russian Intellectuals, came out in 1937 and the third of the series, The Triumph of Bolshevism is recently off the presses.

These three books written by Prof. Tompkins are of incalculable value in understanding Russia, past and present.

In 1939 he went to England and spent a year in the British Museum, his nose literally buried in books. He spent time at Oxford in the Bodleian Library and at the National Library at Berne, Switzerland. He finally went to Paris but by that time was too exhausted to do any more research, he says.

One of the reasons, he thinks, for Russia's backwardness in material things — crafts, metal work, machinery, carpentering — is because the Mongols, when they conquered Russia, took all the skilled craftsmen they could find out of the country. Everyone has consistently claimed, he goes on to say, that Lenin followed Marxist teaching and this he has questioned in his books, particularly in the latest. The revolution, he feels, has perpetuated native Russian traditions rather than made a clean sweep of them. He quotes Tsereteli, a follower of Lenin who said it "was through Lenin that reaction came to Russia." Lenin, thinks Prof. Tompkins, exalted hate over the Christian thought of loving one's fellow man.

In 1938 the Tompkins built their house on Lagoon Road. It stands on a rise commanding a superb view of the harbor, the snowy beauty of Mount Baker on a clear day and at night the golden lights of the legislative buildings and the glow of the new high rises along the shoreline of old James Bay.

When asked if his charming wife, Edna, had not been an inspiration to him in his great work he says, with a twinkle in his keen blue eyes, that the graduate students at Chicago were wont to say when they finished their dissertations: "Dedicated to my wife without whose help this would have been finished a damn sight sooner!"

Dr. Stuart Ramsay Tompkins, now an internationally recognized authority on Russia, has by no means finished with writing. On his desk is a microfilm reader and he has at the moment some 30 microfilm reels, many from the National Archives in Washington, D.C. From these films, some in Russian, some in German, others in English and Swedish, he is trying to find out what financial relations Lenin had, directly or indirectly, with the German government. These were filmed in London from documents found in a castle in southern Germany. They had probably been stripped from Berlin to save them from falling into Russian hands. This material may be used in a future book which is taking form in the active and brilliant mind of this 80-year-old man of letters, a Canadian of whom we may well be proud.

The writing of these books did not come easily to Dr. Tompkins. He says "When dealing with fundamental issues in human life you have to sweat blood."

Today belongs to Father . . . we declare him "Man of the Year." Let families gather round to salute this unsung but indispensable member of the human race.

A little boy once wrote: "Every child should have a father because if it weren't for fathers where would they be? Nowhere, that's where they'd be. If it weren't for fathers you wouldn't hardly see any children 'round Victoria." Yes sir, fathers are pretty necessary people.

One of the best ways to say "I love you" is with food so let's start to pamper our Mr. Wonderful with his favorite food. And who ever heard of a father (or just plain husband or bachelor) who doesn't like steak? For this special day buy the best you can afford . . . whether it's tenderloin or chuck steak, be sure it is cooked just right. I'm sure you know that tenderloin, T-bone, sirloin, or porterhouse from the loin and rib can be broiled or pan fried while the less tender (and less expensive) cuts must be cooked by moist heat.

Meat tenderizers and marinades are the secret of preparing the less tender cuts. Of course you can remember father's taste when seasoning but a good basic marinade is made of salad oil, red wine, lime or lemon juice, dry mustard and salt. To give it zing there is nothing better than that red hot sauce . . . Tabasco. Garlic of course if father likes it.

TABASCO STEAK MARINADE . . . ½ cup salad oil, ½ cup lemon or lime juice, ¼ tsp. Tabasco, ½ cup red wine, 1 tsp. dry mustard and ¼ tsp. of salt. Blend salad oil, lime juice and Tabasco in a shallow dish. Stir in the wine, dry mustard and salt. Mix the mustard and salt to avoid lumping. Put steak in marinade, let stand 4 to 5 hours, turning once. Drain and pat dry before broiling. Enough for one 4 pound steak.

Instant meat tenderizer is a wonderful product and so easy to use . . . slash fat edges to prevent curling and prepare all surfaces of meat, one side at a time as follows . . . thoroughly moisten meat with water . . . pat the water on from the faucet with your fingers, use a pastry brush or draw a wet fork across ½" surface. Sprinkle with instant meat tenderizer, evenly like salt, over the entire surface of meat, about ¼ tsp. per pound. Use no salt. To insure penetration and to retain meat juices, pierce deeply with a kitchen fork at approximately ½ inch intervals. Meat is now ready for cooking. Place steaks on or under preheated broiler, 3 to 4 inches from source of heat. Broil 6 to 7 minutes per side for rare, 8 to 9 inches per side for medium. Thick chuck steaks prepared this way are excellent for the outdoor barbecue.

Bride's Corner

Tricks of the trade . . .

Have all the ingredients cold when making pie crust.

After a cake comes out of the oven cool it on a wire rack for 5 minutes, then loosen the sides and invert cake on rack to finish cooling.

Cakes should not be frosted until cold.

Sprinkle cut fruit . . . apples, peaches, pears and bananas with lemon or lime juice to prevent darkening.

To bring out the flavor of meat or vegetable get into the habit of using MSG. (Accent). The directions are on the shaker. The white crystals do just what the name implies . . . accentuates flavor.

To prevent the bottom crust of a custard or fruit pie from becoming soggy . . . brush with egg white, then let dry a few minutes before pouring in filling.

TODAY IS FATHER'S DAY

PAMPER MR. WONDERFUL WITH FAVORITE FOODS

Seasoned butter or a steak spread makes even the most expensive steak taste better. Here are several recipes that are very popular at our house . . .

DELUXE STEAK BUTTER . . . ½ cup soft butter, 2 tbsp. lemon juice, 1 tsp. minced green onion, 1 tsp. dill weed (optional), 1½ tsp. salt and ¼ tsp. Tabasco or a good dash of cayenne pepper. With an electric or rotary beater mix the butter until fluffy. Beat in balance of ingredients. Store in refrigerator for a couple of hours to allow flavors to develop. This may be used on baked potatoes, little new potatoes or on any vegetables. It enhances born on the cob.

PARSLEY-TABASCO BUTTER . . . ½ cup soft butter, ¼ tsp. tabasco, 2 tbsp. lime juice and 1 tbsp. finely minced fresh parsley. Salt to taste. Directions same as above.

ROMANO STEAK SAUCE . . . ½ tsp. olive or salad oil, 1 medium clove garlic minced very fine, 1 tsp. instant meat tenderizer (the seasoned type), ¼ tsp. sweet basil and 2 7½ oz. cans tomato sauce. In a medium saucepan heat oil, brown garlic, add remaining ingredients and simmer 10 minutes. This is a fine sauce to brush on barbecued steaks 4 or 5 minutes before they are done. When steaks are done sprinkle with grated Parmesan cheese.

I make a mushroom and onion steak sauce which the father in this house loves. You really don't need quantities . . . simply saute some chopped onion or rings of onion in butter until soft. Add some thickly sliced fresh mushrooms and a glass or two of red wine (claret is good). Season with salt, freshly ground black pepper or seasoned pepper and a dash of MSG (Accent) and simmer all for just a few minutes. Spoon over steak.

Most men like well seasoned food. Two of our finest aids are seasoned salt and seasoned pepper. Both come in shakers for kitchen or table use. For beginning-cooks who have not yet mastered the art of seasoning they are a tremendous help and convenience. While speaking of seasonings one can now buy in packages complete seasoning mixes for steaks, roasts, soups and many other dishes. Also complete seasoning for dips and salad dressings. There is just no excuse for poorly seasoned food in this age of convenience products.

Of course we must give father his just desserts. Even after their favorite first course, men, like little boys, look forward to dessert. With strawberries still plentiful let's make a quick Strawberry-Banana Pie.

STRAWBERRY-BANANA PIE . . . one baked pie shell or graham cracker crust (which can be put together in a jiffy), 2 or 3 sliced ripe bananas, about 2 cups sweetened and barely crushed strawberries, save out half a dozen whole berries for garnish and 1 cup cream whipped. Slice bananas into cold pie shell. Spoon over sweetened berries and heap whipped cream on top. Garnish each slice with a whole berry. If your sweetie is watching calories use a packaged

KITCHEN FIRES

DEAR HELOISE:

My neighbor told me that you said we shouldn't use flour or cornstarch to try to put out a kitchen fire that had started from cooking. Is this true?

Jenny H.

Hon, you should believe it! First, let's hope that you don't have a fire, but if you do:

Try to remember BAKING SODA ... (and ladies, it's so inexpensive I don't know why you all don't go out and buy a couple of boxes to have on hand just in case.)

A senior fire inspector told us that when bicarbonate of soda is heated, it produces carbon dioxide gas which excludes the oxygen and extinguishes the fire. He also said that cornstarch or flour might cause an explosion. They are combustible materials when suspended in the air. So don't take a chance. Remember ... BAKING SODA. Heloise

PUT TO THE RACK

DEAR HELOISE:

Every time I reach into my oven to pull out a rack in order to check a roast or something, I end up either burning my pot holders or, worse yet, my fingers.

After burning myself again the other night, I decided to do something about it: I went to the closet and got a regular wire coat hanger. By cutting it in half, and throwing away the part with the hook, I had a perfect "U" shape left. I bent the two ends under so they looked like claws.

Presto, a handy gadget to hook over that hot rack to gently pull it out.

Judy Wertsch

And all our thanks to you, Judy, for figuring this one out.

Anybody can push an even rack back in while it's hot, but it's mighty doggone hard to pull it out.

GRANDPA'S NECKTIES

DEAR HELOISE:

I am an 83-year-old grandpa. I read your newspaper hints and enjoy them very much.

I have a lot of neckties. When I put them on a coat hanger, they always slipped to the floor. So I tied two wire hangers together at each end and slipped the ties in the slot between the hangers.

The ties can be slipped in and out easily, but there is just enough pressure to hold them in place. No more ties on the floor.

I hook the hanger over the closet rod and remove only the tie I select to wear each time.

SWEET VIOLETS

DEAR HELOISE:

When you have plants, such as African violets, that shouldn't get water on their leaves, a kitchen funnel is great.

Place the funnel between the leaves and pour water into the funnel. You won't have trouble with water running down the glass or getting on the leaves.

EAT YOUR SOUP!

DEAR HELOISE:

Have you ever tried putting instant potatoes in soup for babies?

It gives more 'body' to soup and is nourishing, too. Our daughter is starting to feed herself and she likes it this way.

Before, there was more soup on her than in her, but

IRONING TRICK

DEAR HELOISE:

When ironing ruffles, lace edgings and small items, I first put a large straight piece on my ironing board (usually a tablecloth or pillowcase) so that I am ironing two things at once.

SAFE BY A YARD

DEAR HELOISE:

If you have a problem keeping little children out of your lower bureau drawers, here's what to do:

Put a yardstick down through the middle of the drawers so the children can't pull them open.

Joette Wegeler

Those little 'darlings' seldom learn to push the yardstick up out of the drawer handles, and all three drawers are too heavy for them to pull out at the same time.

Heloise

Many are the pitfalls awaiting the unwary history student.

Even the dedicated researcher is lured off course by these sirens of our colorful past. To a writer, these detours can be profitable as well as pleasant; oftentimes research of one article uncovers another story.

Usually these yellowing newspaper accounts lead to a deadend, being too brief or sketchy to provide more than the skeleton of an article. Here are a few of these interesting - sometimes infuriating - diversions of Victoria's early days, from long-ago pages of The Colonist . . .

SIRENS OF COLORFUL PAST

By T. W. PATERSON

The earliest entry in our notebook also is the grimdest. Indians, fishing opposite what is now the Ogden Point grain elevator, late in 1867, hurried ashore with gruesome news. Sadly, it was not a fish story they breathlessly related to authorities. In the shallow depths of low tide, the natives had spotted "the body of a white woman" . . . They say that the hands and feet of the corpse were tied, and that there was a rope about the neck with a stone attached, which anchored the remains to the spot.

"The feet were turned upwards and when seen were 10 feet below the surface. The skin was white and the hair, which they distinctly saw waving with the action of the tide, was long and of a brownish hue."

Police rushed to the scene, dragging the shallow depths from rowboats. But, by daylight, they had had no success. The next day, they tried again, the Colonist remarking, "That a murder has been committed, we entertain little doubt." And that's it. Not another word. Were the Indians mistaken? Lying? Or do these dark waters still hold the secret of some poor woman's violent fate?

That's what we meant when we said history can be infuriating!

Our next mystery is equally intriguing. This is the strange suicide, in January, 1908, of a middle-aged German, whose carefully concealed identity must yet remain his tantalizing secret.

"Do not blame me for the course I have taken, as life is a total failure as far as I am concerned. It will be useless to find out who I am." And find out who he was, they never did.

This forgotten tragedy began with the discovery of a man's body in room 44 of the Queen's Hotel by a Japanese attendant. Police, including a young constable named Blackstock, eventually pieced most of the puzzle together:

The stranger registered as Albert Ehmann, New Westminster, three nights before. According to William Baylis, proprietor, the genial German "appeared in good spirits." "He paid 50 cents for his room," said The Colonist, and sat around the smoking room the whole evening, retiring to bed about 11 o'clock.

"On Monday he spent the day about the city, frequently dropping into the hotel, and in the evening, sitting about until nearly midnight when he again went to bed, again paying 50 cents for his room. Tuesday, the same course was followed and in the evening, after chatting for two or three hours with some of the hotel people until about 11 o'clock, he paid for his room as on previous nights, went into the bar, paid five cents for a glass of beer, and proceeded to his room.

The money spent for the drink was the last cent the man had in the world. When the room was entered yesterday afternoon and the effects of the man searched, not a cent was found.

Next morning, the popular guest did not appear. But there was no indication of tragedy until 2:30, when the Japanese prepared to clean the room. Finding the door locked, with no sound from within, he sought out the desk clerk for the pass key, intending to clean the room while "Mr. Ehmann" was out. When the clerk entered No. 4, he made a grim discovery.

There was Ehmann, asleep in bed. Embarrassed, the clerk stuttered apologies, edging for the door. Then, something told him all was not right. Tiptoeing to the bed, he realized the German would not be roused again . . .

On the nearby washstand was a six-ounce bottle of carbolic acid and a half-drained tumbler of the lethal fluid. Minutes later, Const. Blackstock arrived to begin the macabre investigation which was to involve months of exhaustive inquiry throughout North America and Europe.

At first the case seemed to proceed smoothly enough. Checking the man's last movements, detectives found "it was plain from his accent that in nationality he was a German, but spoke English fluently, appeared to be a man of education, was polite and courteous, and had a fund of stories which he told to the hotel people as well as to some of the guests. On Tuesday night, his last alive, he appeared to be in exceptionally good spirits though at the time he must have had in his possession the carbolic acid with which he later took his own life, and had come to a determination to end it all."

A search of his neatly folded clothing produced a notebook. As Blackstock scanned the tablet, a page fell out. It had been torn out, then replaced loosely beneath the front cover. This was the suicide note. Further in the book were four photographs of an attractive young woman. Inscribed on the back of one were the words, "This is the only woman in the world for me, H.G."

Some were dated, indicating they had been taken on the woman's birthdays at two-year intervals. The latest was placed at Nov. 15, 1906, the woman being judged as 25-years-old from earlier notations. All were taken by the same photographer in Germany. Also enclosed in the notebook were the calling cards of three young ladies.

In an ashtray were the charred remains of several letters and papers, the first evidence of the man having taken pains to hide his identity. A closer examination of his notebook and effects turned up similar clues: He had carefully obliterated his name from the tablet and the sweatband of his black steamer.

The erasing of the names had been done with black ink, which had evidently been rubbed in with his finger. But while the name on the inside of the hat band is wholly indistinguishable, that on the cover of the pocketbook is not so thoroughly obliterated and by means of a magnifying glass a name was faintly discerned. It was either "H. Gotterlich" or "E. Gotterlicher."

Aside from two laundry marks on the German's expensive clothing, there were no further immediate clues.

Requesting the hotel staff, police learned "the unknown . . ." had stated that he had been in San Francisco, leaving there a week before the great earthquake and he had evidently gone straight to the Kootenay country, for he said that he was in that section of the province when the news of the quake arrived.

"He had been a seaman and, in fact, judging from his conversation, he had been a rover about the world. While he appeared willing and ready to chat he never gave out a hint as to himself, his business or past career."

"Mr. Baylis judged from the man's conversation that he had been in Victoria before, for he appeared to be acquainted with the city to a certain extent."

By the end of the day, police were working on a theory. Guessing from his clothing, bearing San Francisco labels, and the fact he had spoken of escaping the Bay City earthquake, officers deduced his wardrobe to be two years old, evidencing he had just been released from the New Westminster jail. His clipped hair and "stubby" moustache supported this belief. Also his small handball; a check of his hotel, food and drink expense roughly corresponded with the amount a prisoner received upon release, plus fare aboard Princess Victoria. However, police admitted that this view had "but little basis."

The lead evaporated when prison officials replied no one matching the German's description had been recently released.

Thursday, a "positive identification." Businessman E. E. Hardwick read the Colonist account and hurried to W. B. Smith's Yates Street parlors. There, he named the corpse as E. J. Gottlich whom he had known years before at Nicola Lake.

Gottlich had been "a finished workman in leather and was well known to those of the district, his jovial manner and ability as a storyteller having gained him a host of friends. . . (He) enlisted in the Strathcona Horse at the time of the Boer War and returned to Nicola Lake sometime in 1902. Prior to Mr. Hardwick's acquaintance with him he had been employed in Kamloops."

"What makes Mr. Hardwick even more certain of the dead man's identity is the fact that a scar can be seen on the left side of the hair. Mr. Hardwick remembers well of being told by Gottlich that the latter had been kicked on the head by a horse at Douglas Lake . . . in years gone by and Mr. Hardwick is positive that Gottlich bore a scar when he knew him."

The inscription on the photograph also seemed to bear out Hardwick's identification. He recalled Gottlich had "never lost an opportunity of referring to his younger sister in words of brotherly praise and on more than one occasion he had used the identical words written on the photograph when showing any of his friends. The initials on the photograph, Mr. Hardwick says, are identical with those of Gottlich and are E. J. G. instead of H. G. Gottlich was German by birth and spoke with a slight accent as did the suicide though his English was quite fluent."

Asked if he knew why his friend had taken his own life, Hardwick sadly shook his head, recalling Gottlich to have been "a happy-go-lucky individual with a genial disposition which made him friends wherever he went and he never appeared to have had any trouble."

More days of intensive police inquiry, Victorians apparently enthralled by the tragic mystery. Then . . . the end: Mr. Gottlich was alive and healthy. At least, that's what four friends declared when they viewed the corpse after Hardwick's identification.

Inquiries from as far as Minnesota from persons seeking lost relatives or friends poured in. But none of the descriptions matched the German. The only remaining clue was the name and address of the German photographer. If he remembered his attractive customer and had her name or address, it would seem a relatively straight path to the identity of the man who carried her pictures so faithfully.

We continued through later issues of The Colonist without success. A deadline is nearing, we press on. Perhaps the provincial archives holds the key to the mystery man who ended his life half a world away from the woman of his heart.

On these same pages is recorded the search for one of Victoria's most familiar characters, Andrew Davids, known to all as "Speak Easy Dave." For 25 years, the old Norwegian was a waterfront fixture. Once he had sailed with Hansen, the "Flying Dutchman." In his day, he had been accorded the hard-won honor of finest sealer afloat, being known from San Francisco to Bering Sea. But, a quarter of a century later, liquor and age had reduced him to the job of watchman aboard the launch Elwood.

When he didn't report on schedule to owner Frederick Smith, proprietor of the Light House Saloon, a two-week dragging of the harbor was begun.

Sadly, again we must move on, leaving the search for Speak Easy Dave to an indefinite, if predictable, conclusion. Some day, with a few minutes to spare, we must return to the January, 1908, Colonist.

Heppily, our last entry of this period is on a lighter note. A practical joke, to be exact. It all started with an advertisement in a Seattle newspaper. A retired British officer, the wealthy owner of "palatial" Victoria estate, desired a competent housekeeper to oversee his large staff of servants. He offered the fabulous salary of $25 a week plus numerous fringe benefits.

It was a housekeeper's dream. A small army — no less than 35 — "some young and chic, some sedate, others fascinating, and the majority of the fair, fat and 40 type," responded to Victoria PO Box 567. They soon received — all of them — an invitation from Mr. H. Maddock to come to Victoria.

Which created no little confusion when the ecstatic ladies, each unaware of her many sisters, descended upon an unsuspecting city.

Citizens trembled before the wrath of some of the more forthright ladies, who soon realized something was amiss. Victim of their righteous wrath was real estate agent V. C. Maddock. He probably was the only Maddock listed in the directory, hence his enquiring, then enraged, callers.

Poor Maddock was so besieged that he was forced to call police in self defence. But not before he passed the buck to another innocent Maddock, the manager of a Vancouver sugar refining company. This gentleman stayed at the Empress Hotel most of the year; fortunately for him, he was out of town when came the female invasion.

Contacted by telegram, the gracious executive offered to pay the expenses of the first two women to reach him, unaware of the others. When apprised of the situation, however, he immediately informed the ladies it must have been his brother who placed the ad!

Finally, it was decided all were victims of a practical joker, a friend of either of the Maddocks. For some of the ladies it was not very funny as they had surrendered positions in Washington when assured of attractive employment in Victoria.

Just four of the thousands of fascinating stories to be found in old issues of The Colonist.

Artist in Spite of Everything

By VIVIENNE CHADWICK

Albert W. Jones, of 1260 McKensie Street, is a man at the height of his career . . . and under the circumstances this is rather remarkable.

In addition to being a talented painter, he is a retired, much-travelled marine engineer, a pianist, and a witty and amusing conversationalist full of enthusiasm for life and living. All of which is fair enough, but what makes it remarkable is the fact that this gentleman, on his last birthday a few weeks ago, was 93 years old.

It's hard to believe, when one talks with him, and it doesn't matter anyway. Here is one of those ageless beings, active, vitally interested in his work, with, obviously, keen eyesight and steady hand. His memory is vivid and unimpaired, and his speech that of a young man, swift in repartee and the humorous phrase.

Mr. Jones is a Londoner, and his father, Henry Champion Jones, was a noted artist and a member of the famous London Sketch Club. But the financial rewards of talent then, it seems, were skimpy, and Jones Senior considered his ability a misfortune. He frowned upon his boy's leanings in the same direction, and, when the youngster was 16, removed him from a good school and apprenticed him to a firm of engineers.

Albert hated it. He had been a good student, was enjoying his school work, and had won a scholarship. His masters were annoyed too. They descended on his male parent in a body, to protest, but to no avail. Albert became a marine engineer.

After five years, when he was 21, his father got him a job with the British India Steam Navigation Company, and off he went to Calcutta, Bombay, and so on.

He didn't like this any better. "The sea was too wet," he complained. "India was too hot, and the so-and-so engine-room was the hottest of all!"

Besides, he had no time — and anyway he was always too dirty — for sketching. When the vessel wasn't under way and the engines being tended, there was always endless work to be done on other machinery.

He put in four solid years of this, and then got six months' leave. After which along came the Boer War, so the young engineer spent some 18 months in troop and hospital ships.

"When I was out of that," he recalled, and grinned, "I found a girl to Canada!"

He didn't get her however.

Somebody else did. Eventually he did marry, although he has been a widower now for some 40 years. The couple had no children.

Arrived in Canada, he worked for a while on a wheat farm in Qu'Appelle, and then went on to Vancouver, seeing that engineering was all he knew, to look for a ship. Here he was told that Seattle was looking for men, so he crossed the border in the hope of a job. Work was available, but only, he was told, as a water-tender to the engine-room. This was a demotion he didn't care for, so he refused it with thanks and came back to Vancouver, where he ultimately landed a series of berths in the tugboats and cannery vessels up and down the coast.

This wasn't good. The pay was poor, and when the ships tied up the crews were out of work. However, he had made friends with his Second, who came up with an idea. The Second had recently made an 18-months canoe trip with his father down the Mackenzie and Liard Rivers, and wanted to go back and investigate the placer mining situation. Would Jones go along? Jones would.

Between them they built a fine, strong canoe. It was 16 feet long with a 3 foot beam, (his memory for details is really extraordinary) with seams filled with oak strips bedded in lead, and an overall covering of canvas, suitable for rough water.

They sent the canoe by train to Lytton and paddled it north up the Fraser as far as Lillooet, intending to carry on to the mines on the south bank of the Cadwallader. But at Lillooet they came to a dead end. They were too late in the year. The ice was coming down everywhere, the rivers were too dangerous even for the Indians. Not a guide would go with them.

"So we went back to Vancouver," admits Mr. Jones, "with our tails between our legs!"

His next ship was a whaler, and most of the First World War years were spent at this occupation.

"We killed 36 whales," he remembers, "and I was always sorry for them. I think a whale is a beautiful creature."

His next venture was in real estate. He was approached by a Vancouver salesman who was positive he could make them both a lot of money. Albert thought that would pencil was never idle, and he piled up stacks of vivid little pictures on the back of forms intended for quite different uses.

"The foreman should have wrung my neck, amusing myself on company time," he comments, and gives again that surprisingly youthful chuckle.

Anyway, he collected scores of excellent sketches, and his skilled draughtsmanship is noticeable in the meticulous drawings of the various machines at which his subjects are laboring.

He is something of an actor, too. His description of a plump machine shop mate who, having over-imbibed and come a-visiting, fell down the stairs on top of him, was completely hilarious.

The walls of his sunny sitting-room are covered with his paintings, all of which he frames himself. (Except for the glass. He is hoping to learn how to cut this properly, but so far his efforts, if wildly funny when illustrated, have been something less than successful.) He is without doubt a most pleasing artist. His water colors, both land and seascapes, are clear and clean, and he has an unerring eye both for color and for dramatic contrast in light and shade. One of his few oils is a composite of sketches surreptitiously made in the coffee shop of a downtown department store. This, I thought, was a bit reminiscent of Toulouse-Lautrec in color and grouping, (if without the bawdy detail!).

He is considering the possibility of a one man show in the near future, and one hopes this will come about. I should certainly like to see more of his work. He doesn't seem to care whether or not he sells anything — he has done the pictures for his own pleasure and because he can't help himself — and his one regret is that his father, those long years ago, turned thumbs down on his son's artistic aspirations, instead of passing on to the boy the knowledge and experience which would have been so helpful.

He wouldn't say much about his piano playing, only that all his family had been musical, and that he himself had taken up the study much too late. But I noticed that the music on the instrument in his room was open at Chopin's Minute Waltz, which definitely isn't a selection for a stumbling amateur!

A long flight of stairs seemed to be nothing to this young elderly gentleman. He saw me to the street most gallantly, and as I got into my car he called: "Now you be a good girl!"

I took that as a compliment. Though I bet me it's not the suggestion he might have made in an earlier year! I hope.

BENEATH THE SEA

a small part. More than 99 per cent of all plant life in the sea consists, not of what most of us would recognize as plants, but of microscopic particles floating in the upper hundred feet or so of the ocean, where they can get light and energy from the sun's rays. Though they cannot be seen with the naked eye, they are there in uncountable numbers — suspended in the water like the motes of dust we sometimes see floating in a shaft of sunlight. These living specks belong to the floating layer of marine life called plankton.

The food that man lives by is roughly divided into carbohydrates and protein. The former give us ready energy and the protein are the body builders. Our most available carbohydrates are vegetables and they may be produced from a given area of ground in about a ten to one ratio over meat proteins. Thus one of our greatest difficulties in the face of a rapidly growing world population is to make more protein available to mankind. That is why our curiosity naturally turns to the oceans where 80 per cent of the world's possible food material is produced by nature.

Even as hunters, we have far to go in applying mechanical inventions and devices to the trapping of the rich protein sources of the 80 billion acres of ocean. Today, we approach the sea as men 300 years ago attacked the virgin continent of America. We hunt, trap, and begin to cultivate the margins of a half known area of vast resource.

Wherever the land is right for it, we can have our herds of beasts and control our pasturage and calculate the resulting food per acre. We can further improve our output by selective breeding of the creatures themselves and the provender they consume. Can this be done with the ocean herbivores, the fishes which are the flesh of the sea?

Let's look at it this way. One thousand tons of vegetable plankton (phytoplankton) converted by grazing to animal plankton (zooplankton), then to plankton-feeding fishes and finally to carnivorous fishes will in the end only supply one ton of fish; then compare the fact that this same 1,000 tons of vegetable algae in the salt ponds, when converted directly as food to the milkfish, will yield about 100 tons of fish. Here by short-cutting the chain of conversion, man arrives at a hundred times better production of protein food.

It is obvious from this review of the situation that this type of study, and subsequent beneficial increase in protein from fish life in the sea, is attached with a great initial advantage at the beginning of the food chain which starts with the vegetable and animal plankton that appears everywhere in the vast pastures of the ocean. It is reasonable, then, to look to the cultivation and the farming of sea plants, seaweeds and the plankton as the most efficient way of extracting a maximum yield of food from salt water.

The advantages we gain by harvesting land vegetables rather than beef are small in comparison to those we might gain were we to harvest plankton instead of fishes. By reason of the larger chain of creatures and times which intervenes between man and the plankton, we may enormously increase the yield of food from the ocean by going directly to the plants — by as much as a thousand or more times.

A net made of stramin, 30 meters square, with 20 per cent filtering efficiency, could filter more than 22,000 tons of water per hour in a two knot tide. If 10 such nets fished 12 hours a day they would yield more than 500 pounds dry weight of plankton, enough to feed 257 people.

Before leaving this subject of seaweed and plankton farming we should look at the story of oyster cultivation which is one of man's tive hunting economy into the controlled practices and techniques of a sea-farming economy is evident. It is also evident that increasing our engineering skills is not enough unless the basic biological understanding is likewise developed. Practices used in pond culture and oyster culture, where man abets nature in producing from the primary end of the food chain with least loss of energy, certainly encourage optimost successful attempts to control salt water food supply. This culture, like that of fish ponds, is of ancient origin. Because oysters grow in shallow waters, man has been able to study their life cycle in great detail.

Today's oyster farmer buys his seed, strews them upon shosen ground, and with little help from himself, waits for nature to produce the final commercial oyster. And nature will produce this oyster, that is, if the salinity, temperature, feed, mineral though there are limitations of space.

With new knowledge and techniques which have become available only in the last decades, man is now beginning to tap undersea riches. Though his relationship to the sea is still that of primitive hunter rather than cultivator, he is on his way at last to exploiting it for food, water, minerals and control of his climate.

For surely the most arresting thing about this tremendously important subcontinent is neither its pollution, predatory animals, silt, wave action, etc., are controlled by nature, but how often she runs amok destroying entire beds of oysters.

In the very near future man will create offshore salt water lakes by pumping salt water from the ocean to the lake. At the pump station, the temperature, salinity and any pollution are completely controlled. As cattle are led to feeding pastures and fed high protein foods for fattening before slaughter, so will oysters be fed concentrated plankton enormity nor economic potential, but the fact that almost nothing is being done by Canada to explore and develop it.

Canada is facing a new era in the management of its aqua resources. We have reached the fork in the road. If there is to be an adequate supply of salmon and oysters for our future needs, management and development should not be hampered by lack of foresight and planning.

Man's environment is all im-

FOR FOOD, WATER, MINERALS

before harvest. Cultivation stations will be introduced for the mass growth of photosynthetic micro-organisms for use as foods for rapid oyster growth. No longer will man depend on nature to produce, for now he will completely control all aspects of environment and growth. Beside the mentioned advantages, acre for acre the salt water lakes will produce 15 to 20 times more shell stock of uniform shells and higher quality meat.

The reason for going into some portant for the present and for the future. His contact with his surroundings is many sided. Sea, air and soil are the most common. All of these play an important role in his welfare, safety and prosperity. In fact, life is co-ordination with the environment and harmony in this relationship.

Our natural resources mean much in the creation of good environmental conditions. They need to be utilized in the pursuit of good health, a high standard of living, detail on oyster culture is the obvious fact that, along with fish farming in ponds, it illustrates one of the best ways of increasing and utilizing the tremendous initial productivity of the sea.

AND CONTROL OF CLIMATE

As we survey the past efforts of man to enhance the natural end-product of nature in the sea — that is, the supply of protein for his table — the original thesis of the necessity of changing the rather blind instincprosperity and the creation of opportunities for human achievement. Man's very survival depends on his wise use of resources.

The salmon and oyster is so common to all of us that we seldom think about their unique properties, that they dictate the locations of communities and industries, that it nourishes the income and survival of man, that it provides for health and standards of living, as well as offering unchallenged strides in the industry for those who will take the future into their hands and mold this industry to meet the quality and needs of the future.

Will our salmon and oyster industry remain the same or even diminish because of lack of proper foresight and management? Will we not attempt to increase our takes by increasing our knowledge or will we be satisfied at handing down to our next generation the greed of taking without replacing what is due in order to maintain an even trend with population increase? This must be of concern to all of us. It is one of the most urgent problems today on this continent as well as many other places in the world.

Our sea resources are a great national heritage given for our use and management. This is a clear mandate for wise management. What is the record of our stewardship with this great commodity? In many ways we have squandered our heritage. We have failed to plan adequately for the future, and we have shown the most blasé laissez-faire attitude conceivable. But the time has come when we are being forcibly brought to a realization of our actual position. These changes have been slow and insidious. They have come without fanfare or much public recognition.

Today's problems, and they will extend into the future, involve quantity and quality. Our salmon and oyster use is increasing rapidly, and the distribution of available supplies is a great difficulty, especially with the growth of population. The other problem of 'quality' enters the scene as one of the most challenging in this country. It is associated with our technological advances and the willingness of private management to set aside funds for experimental research to higher quality. We are now in an era of greatest significance to mankind, a fork in the road to progress, a challenge to change. Science has made phenomenal advances and has raised our standard of living to a new peak. This must continue to go forward with continued alliance between governmental and private management of this vast resource.

The rising tide of population and the falling reservoir of food resources constitute ... the greatest issue facing mankind today. There will be no peace in the world as long as half of its people suffer from hunger and poverty, knowing that food in abundance is entirely possible.

The sea holds a perennial lure. Its immensity, its capricious moods, and its ungovernable power are a challenge to the spirit of adventure in each of us. Thus the sea, shaper of the world's surface, moderator of climate, cradle of life — unbelievably large, is the world's last great storehouse of wealth. Man has begun his assault on the sea, and he is certain to continue.

Six New Centennial Stories of Canada

Six more Stories of Canada have rolled off the presses, making a round dozen now on the market to mark the Centennial Year. The new books fully sustain the quality of the first six. Big feature of these pamphlet-type booklets is their fine illustration and the simplicity with which they make Canadian history come alive for youngsters.

Canadian Prime Ministers tells of the 14 Prime Ministers whose terms have spanned the first hundred years of Confederation. Their stories are the story of Canada. From Sir John A. Macdonald to Prime Minister Pearson the reader slips through the pages of history, illustrated with the portraits of the Prime Ministers in full color. This is a book for the young and old, a book for every boy and girl and a book for every parent.

Canadian Settlers is the companion book to Canadian Explorers which was one of the first six books published and previously reviewed. In Canadian Settlers we have the story of the first settler, Louis Hebert, among the hardy group of Frenchmen who in 1605 built Port Royal on the North Shore of Nova Scotia. Champlain was there. The two went on to found Quebec. We read of Talon and Bishop Laval; of the expulsion of the Acadians and the coming of the Loyalists after the American War of Independence.

Wave after wave of settlers flooded in from Britain and Russia, Italy and central Europe, to make the new Canada.

Bluenose is a name to conjure with, the heroic name of the Queen of the Atlantic. This is a sea story to thrill, to read and read again. It tells of the Cinderella of a ship that slaved on the fishing banks as a windjammer but "could also wear the ermine of a queen to remain forever the undefeated world champion racing schooner."

The story tells of her brushes with death. How one fierce morning of April 7, 1926, a cloud came down off Sable Island. A gale gonged the sea into frenzy. "In that whirlpool of churning white water and shrieking wind Bluenose fought for her life. Cap'n Angus still recalls it as her greatest moment."

We read how she found her final harbor deep in a tropical sea beside the coral reef that ground her to death as she took her final plunge alone. This book is an epic for everyone to read this summer as

STORIES OF CANADA, Brunswick Press, 35 cents.

Bluenose II, her replica, sails up the St. Lawrence to visit Expo 67 at Montreal.

The Birth of Hockey tells the story of hockey in Canada, which had its birth on Christmas Day, 1855, in a game played by the Royal Canadian Rifles at Kingston, Ontario, or perhaps a little earlier at Halifax, Nova Scotia. The development of the game over a hundred years is described. The formation of the National Hockey League, the establishment of the Hockey Hall of Fame and an account of the hockey "greats" of succeeding generations, Fred "Cyclone" Taylor, the legendary whirlwind of the early-1900s, George Vezina, Bobby Hull, Gordie Howe, "Rocket" Richard and the rest. As they play the game through the pages of this book we can hear the click of the stick on the puck, the squeal of the skates cutting into the ice, and the roar of the crowd as the puck hits the net. This is the book of Canada's national game, with its story right up to the professional hockey expansion program which is the order of the day.

Louis Cyr tells the story of "The Strongest Man Who Ever Lived," the French-Canadian Hercules who could lift a crowd of men on a platform weighing 4,337 pounds, 22 men weighing nearly 22 pounds each. He could outpoint all the weight-lifters of the world and was as famous in London and New York as he was in Canada.

Captain White Bear is a different sort of a hero. He was Captain Joseph Bernier, explorer of the Arctic and a legend to the Eskimos as he was to the people of Canada.

THE SNAKE PIT

Though the Puerto Rican barrio in New York's East Harlem exists cheek by jowl with the Negro ghetto, no Puerto Rican has yet appeared to write the equivalent of Claude Brown's devastating Manchild in the Promised Land. One had begun to wonder whether Puerto Ricans, with easy access to their own Spanish-speaking island, would ever produce a writer of consequence in the English language. These doubts are now set at rest by this cool and unselfconscious report from New York's edge of the night. It is every bit as shocking an eye-opener as Brown's memorable book.

casually, and we accept them as part of his jungle lingo. His language is part scatology, part juve, and always intensely hippy. (A glossary is provided.)

Piri makes no effort to disguise the handful he must have been. As a schoolkid he punched a woman teacher on the nose and ran away. Education could have saved him, since he possessed the intelligence to make something of himself. Instead, he preferred life in the streets, "hustling, whoring and hating." His word-pictures of life in the barrio, of pot-taking in the back alleys, of the city hospital on a Saturday night, when it resembled an abattoir, bring to mind the darker pages of Oscar Lewis's La Vida.

It was prison which gave Piri time to think. After his release on parole he appears to have changed the direction of his life, though the book ends at this point. We are told, however, that he is now a husband and father and working on another book. Down These Mean Streets has probably served him as a cathartic, and one gets the impression that he has at last come to terms with himself. Someday this book will do for him what it is going to do for his readers — allow him too look objectively to the snake-pit in which he lived and from which he was lucky enough to escape.—J.B.

World Problem

It would be difficult to invent a drearier and more off-putting title than Paths to World Order, but, as is so often the case, this unimaginative title conceals something worthwhile.

The book contains a series of essays based on lectures delivered at the Sixth World Order Study Conference sponsored by the National Council of Churches and the Methodist Church in tribute to Dag Hammarskjöld.

That sounds pretty stodgy, too. But don't go away.

The first several essays by very learned men deal with Hammarskjöld and his work and philosophy. They are well worth reading, but if they're not your cup of tea, skip them.

Not to be missed are essays on Latin America, by Dr. Emilio E. Castro (no relation!), on Asia, by PATHS TO WORLD ORDER: Copp Clark paperback; 144 pages; $1.75.

Arthur S. Lall, and on Africa, by Dr. Ahsanul L. Vilakazi.

These three essays offer great insight into the afflictions of these problem areas.

But THE essay, one that is worth the price of the book, is by that great humanitarian economist, Barbara Ward.

Her subject is the growing gap between the wealthy few and the vast number of poverty stricken people in the world. She is probably the world's greatest expert on this subject and in this essay she is at her mastery best.

Paths to World Order is not exactly light bedtime reading, but then the facts of the case aren't very funny either. Even if we don't intend to do anything we can at least read about the world's ills, and thought-provoking addition to political science is not a bad way to start. — E.D.W.H.

CHICHESTER'S CHALLENGE WAS TERRIFYING HORN

Reviewed by JOHN BARKHAM

A wiry, elderly Englishman who wears glasses for reading recently sailed his 54-foot ketch, Gipsy Moth, back to England across the Atlantic after having single-handedly circumnavigated the globe. Chichester (now Sir Francis in recognition of his feat) sailed the classic Clipper course from England outboard bound by way of the Cape of Good Hope to Australia (his only stop) and thence home by way of dreaded Cape Horn. The climax of the voyage was the doubling of the Horn, that sinister black rock which has been the cemetery of seamen for centuries.

Chichester negotiated the Horn with the panache we have come to expect of this celebrated lone adventurer. In 1929 he was the first man to fly solo from England to Australia, and in recent years he twice sailed the North Atlantic singlehanded. But the Horn... ah, there lay the ultimate test, as Everest is ultima thule for mountaineers.

"For years," he confesses in this book, "I pondered the matter of sailing the world by way of Cape Horn, but I told myself that anyone who tried it in a small yacht must be crazy." Crazy or not, Chichester had a boat built to his design, an elegant craft incorporating his ideas for safety and speed and one which successfully carried him round the Horn.

His remarkable feat did not receive the press coverage which it deserved. No doubt if he had been piloting some new mechanical marvel it would have. Chichester's survival depended on courage, pinpoint navigation, and superhuman sailing skill—old-fashioned virtues no machine can replace. In Europe his feat was hampered; a score or so of reporters flew out to the Cape Horn area for the occasion.

Fortunately the BBC, in a unique airplane sequence, was able to film Gipsy Moth IV battling the mountainous seas off the Horn. To watch this graceful craft gliding between huge waves against a stormy sky gave this viewer an unforgettable thrill.

The book was written before Chichester embarked on his voyage and consists of excerpts he made from his reading about others who had sailed the Clipper route before him. The great sailors are all here—Sir Francis Drake (for whom the Drake Passage is named), the great Joshua Slocum of New Bedford, Mass. (perhaps the greatest of all the solo circumnavigators), Richard Henry Dana (whose Two Years Before the Mast is so well written that, 120 years later, it prompted Chichester to criticize the captain's navigation of the Horn), saltwater novelist Joseph Conrad and John Macdonald, and many others.

Chichester spells out in some detail why the seas around the Horn are so terrifying. The "Roaring Forties," which whirl around southern latitudes unimpeded, are blocked only by the Andes, creating vicious cyclones which funnel through the exit at the Horn to produce monstrous turbulence. This, plus boiling cross-currents, fog, rain, hail, snow and drift ice from the Antarctic, combine to create the ultimate test for seamanship. Four small boats have attempted the Horn singlehanded. Only two (now three) have made it.

Chichester recalls the case of Vancouver Islanders Miles and Beryl Smeeton, who twice attempted to round the Horn in 1957. The first time a gigantic wave, described by Mrs. Smeeton as a "waterfall," lifted the boat into the sky, plunged it into the trough like a roller-coaster, and caused it to somersault stern over stern. The craft was dismasted, but the crew survived. Several months later, their boat repaired, the Smeetons tried again. This time their boat was rolled over sideways and again dismasted. After that they gave up.

But Chichester made it, though he radioed back after the ordeal that no power on earth would ever get him into those "nightmare" seas again. I hope he has used his time on the long voyage home to record in detail his fearsome encounter with the Horn. It should be a book to remember.

IMPRESSIONIST

Charles Merrill Mount was perfectly equipped to write this unconventional, forthright biography. Himself a painter who understands what it means to see with a painter's eye, he has firmly grounded opinions which he expresses boldly, and, to cap it all, can write rings round the "art appreciators" who go on perpetuating the same old romantic fables. His subject is Claude Monet, one of the fathers of Impressionism, and his biography is anything but the customary reverential traversal.

MONET, by Charles Merrill Mount; Simon & Schuster; 264 pp.; $10.

Yet genius is in its own justification. Who cares that Dostoevsky was a gambler or Beethoven a crabbed old curmudgeon? It's the work that counts, and it fell to Monet to make the break with the traditionalism of Corot, Courbet and Daubigny. The author imparts genuine intellectual excitement to Monet's discovery of what he could do with his palette if he discarded Courbet's blacks and browns. We are made to see how, with his broken-color technique, he achieved an effect of twinkling brilliance on tree leaves, how he struggled until the end of his life to capture sunlight on a cathedral or lilies in a pond. Here the painter's eye merges with the writer's pen.

Readers who may once have confused Monet with Manet will be amazed to learn how Edouard Manet himself disgustedly discovered that praise heaped on him at the Paris Salon was really intended for a new young painter named Monet. The author is absorbing, too, in his dissection of the techniques of Monet and Manet (both in his view lacked disciplined training), Degas (original but sometimes contrived), Pissarro (a landscape painter whose figures were "lamentable"), Renoir (a so-so draftsman), and Staley (who, lacking originality, was influenced by his colleagues).

From all this ferment emerged Impressionism, a movement which decisively altered the course of painting. Mount concedes that Monet made history "by imposing his personality on the times," but insists that the victory was dearly bought. "Frightened by their abysmal failure to recognize the Impressionists, critics abdicated any function beyond indicating what was NEW, permitting systematic judgement to disappear before criteria of novelty." What's worse, this acceptance of novelty for its own sake has percolated to the present. It is a rousing note on which to close this mind-stretching biography. — J.B.

Another Catfish Bend Fable

BLOW A WILD BUGLE FOR CATFISH BEND, by Ben Lucien Burman; Tappinger Publishing Co., $2.75.

Ben Lucien Burman is back with his friendly critics at Catfish Bend, which should be all the recommendation his fans require.

If you are not acquainted with these charming animal tales, Blow a Wild Bugle makes a fine introduction. The characters are members of a highly civilized animal community living somewhere along the lower Mississippi in perfect harmony with each other, which in itself is a quiet satire on the quarrelsome human race.

In this book the citizens of Catfish Bend gird to deal with an invasion of coyotes from the West who consider themselves a superior species.

All ends well, but not before we have been gently amused, entertained and enlightened. I said of an earlier Catfish Bend fable that it was an admirable blend of sophistication and naivete; the same may be said of this. The drawings are by Alice Caddy (Mrs. Burman).

THE CASE, by Freeman Wills Crofts. Introduction by James Wilson. Norton. $4.50.

KITSILANO BEACH

Vancouver's Many-Dimensioned Playground was Once Battleground in Ownership Dispute

By LOIS LIGHT

A sunny day in summer finds up to 25,000 people lolling, swimming or playing at Kitsilano Beach on the curve of the Pacific Ocean called English Bay, in Vancouver. Not only is the swimming good and the shoreline long, but so many other attractions tempt the visitor that it is almost impossible to "do" the beach in a day.

The picnickers and holidayers would find it hard to imagine that 100 years ago their beach was a natural paradise, 320 acres where ducks, deer, bear, elk and even cougar and wolf roamed the woods. And they would find it even harder to imagine that their beach was once a bizarre battleground.

In 1884, Sam Greer, a vigorous, irresistible Irishman, well known to B.C.'s early settlers, acquired these acres, not realizing or perhaps not caring that his homestead was CPR property, on which Crown rights had been forbidden since 1882, when the company had decided on Vancouver as its western terminal.

Sam settled down in his Eden, with his wife and children. In 1885, the CPR served notice that they wanted their property back but as Sam figured it was his property, he ignored the summons. For five years letters, verbal pleadings, and threats failed to budge the indomitable Greer. The company even tried to pretend the Greers weren't there. It dug post holes for telegraph lines, and laid lines for the railroad, but Sam patiently undid all the damage, filling in the holes and ripping up the tracks, at night. It was like a delightful musical comedy except that by now the property was worth about $500,000, and it was home to the Greers so the consequences to them were serious.

In September, 1891, the sheriff and his aide finally descended to evict the Greers. A thunderous blast of gunshot temporarily incapacitated the man, but reinforcements finally flushed Sam out and escorted him to jail (where his three-year sentence was shortened to six months due to public pressure.)

Left to protect her possessions and her family, Mrs. Greer proved a pretty handful for the authorities. When a boxcar was backed in along the tracks which had been laid as far as Sam's behavior had allowed, it was loaded from the front with the Greer's possessions, and unloaded from the back by Mrs. Greer. It was necessary to set fire to the house to finally flush out the Greers, who still refused to leave the property until the poor, bedevilled posse recovered the chickens who had scattered to the woods, and milked the cow.

After the Greers left, the beach became a fashionable summer resort, accessible only by boat down the Fraser River, by foot across a trestle bridge, and then by buggy over a former wagon track. (This trip takes about 10 minutes over Burrard Bridge now.)

When streetcar service was inaugurated in 1905, so many people took advantage of the beach that tents dotted the sand three deep, the length of the waterfrontage, and in 1908 became too crowded to be sanitary. A group of public spirited citizens subscribed $1,500 to buy a beach park for young Vancouver, for which the city eventually reimbursed them in order to acquire the property for development into the park it has become.

The name was changed from Greer's Beach to Kitsilano, after Chief Khaht-sah-la-nough, an Indian chief who had lived in the area as a boy.

Looking at the crowded beach, the modern concession buildings, the large expanses of lawns, it is almost impossible to recreate the scene of 80 years ago. Where the Greer home stood is now a large modern bathhouse and concession stand. Behind this a dozen tennis courts provide year-round exercise, free, to sport enthusiasts. At the north end of the park a large treed area, equipped with stoves and picnic tables attracts picnickers as soon as the coastal winter rains stop.

If picnicking or swimming isn't to the visitor's taste, there are other attractions to ensure an interesting visit.

Bulky, well-preserved old Engine No. 374 has its special place of honor in front of the tennis courts. In 1887 this sturdy locomotive pulled the first train across Canada.

About a quarter of a mile north, at the extreme other end of the park, guided by a giant finger reaching skyward which turns out to be an authentic totem pole, the plucky RCMP boat, the St. Roch, stands, permanently berthed in concrete, and this year, finally, a permanent shelter. The little ship, the first to circumnavigate the North American continent, is the chief attraction of the adjoining Maritime Museum, built eight years ago during the Centennial year of British Columbia.

But perhaps the most famous attraction at Kitsilano Beach, and one known by travellers from all parts of the world, is the Kitsilano Showboat. Built at the edge of what is thought to be the largest outdoor pool in the world, the physical structure of the Showboat is a large cement platform, with the backdrop decor of its Southern namesake. It is harder to describe just what Showboat really is.

Started more than 25 years ago by Bert Emery, retired druggist and a round "ball of fire," to bring languishing talent and impoverished audiences together during the depression, it has become a unique institution. No one gets paid for performing, yet so many artists clamor to perform that auditions have become necessary. No one pays to watch the show, although collections are taken up for those who want to help defray some of the expenses, such as new bleachers, dressing rooms.

As many as 20,000 have gathered in an evening to watch a particular show—as when one of the radio stations staged an extravaganza complete with a bathtub race in the pool, and parachute jumpers for a climax, or when night club entertainer Mimi Hines appeared with her husband Phil Ford for a nostalgic public tete-a-tete with Bert Emery. Mimi was one of the performers who made her first stage appearance on Showboat when she lived in Vancouver as a small girl.

So was Juliette, Canada's TV darling. So were many others who went on to make names for themselves in ballet, the music world, or in drama. But most of the performers are from local dancing schools, community concert groups or playgrounds, local radio stations—spiced by the occasional specialty such as a prize-winning band, a brother-and-sister act, or a special performance by one of the local Indian talent groups.
